NEW AMERICAN LAW OF CITIZENSHIP

President Roosevelt has approved a law enacted by the American Congress to restore the citizenship of those Americans who had lost it because of their service in the armed forces of the Allies before the entry of the United States into the war. The law provides that those who, since September 1, 1939, have lost their American citizenship by taking an oath of allegiance to any country at war with the Axis may regain their American citizenship by taking an oath of repatriation before an American diplomatic or consular officer. The same provision applies to those American citizens, with dual nationality, who lost their citizenship through their service in the forces of America's Allies.

The men affected by the new American law who make their presence in Great Britain known to the American Embassy in London or to one of the United States consular offices in this country, will be informed when they can call to take the oath of repatriation.
