FOREMAN COWBOYS

Co-operation Necessary for Success of Pep Organization, Voyles Says

McGill Stresses Interest of Cowboys in First Year

With the election of Claud Voyles as foreman to succeed Ed. Taegel, who resigned, the Cowboys opened their first regular bi-weekly luncheon at the Cafeteria Thursday at 1 o'clock. During the course of the luncheon, Richard Blalock, former foreman of the Cowboys and chairman of the meeting, announced to the members of the Cowboys the resignation of Taegel from the office of foreman.

In resigning, Taegel explained in a letter to Blalock the difficulty he would have in devoting the proper amount of time to the organization this year, but assured the former foreman that his services were at all times at the command of the Cowboys and that his deepest feelings were for the boys and their work.

er Center College co-star with Bo athletes, and Allen, another football McMillan, is more responsible than flash. only Heinie Pfan at center as a nucleus, James must literally mold a pair of ends, tackles and guards.

The average fan is anxious to see the Saturday game because of the highly touted uniforms that the Steers will prance around in. A new shade of Orange, rubber shoulder pads, and stick-'em stripes on the jerseys are some of the novelties to be donned against the Georgetown school.

From far away West Point comes the news that Bud Sprague is certain to make the squad if not the team. The two-hundred pound tackle has fight, speed, and experience, most of which was developed right here on Clark Field. Each year the Army puts one or more stars on the All-American team. Since the big sports writers of the East refuse Conference, Sprague may get his chance at the recognition so many in Texas deserve.

Now Rice comes forth with another ace on her coaching staff. Ernie Hjertberg, coach of the Irish-American club which produced over half the membership of the 1908 U. S. Olympic team, comes to the Owl school next year. Needless to say, Ernie's biggest job is trying to produce a team near enough to Texas to offer her a little competition.

MAJESTIC

The spirit and romance of Spain glow in Douglas Fairbanks' new pho toplay, "Don Q, Son of Zorro," now holding the screen at the Majestic Theater. This story is the dramatization of the old adage, "Truth erushed to earth shall rise again."

The hero, a dashing young Spanish Californian, is sent to Spain by his father to complete his education. It is soon demonstrated that he is an expert with the type of stock whip Margaret Kilgore, Dorothy Smith, used at that time in California. Lillian Bullington, Jessie Ormsbee, While illustrating his ability with one Gladys Stallings, Evelyne Thompson, of these whips, he gets into trouble that leads to a duel.

A bulk rushing in while the fight is on, ends the combat and results in save time and money by going to the the hero saving his opponent's life. His reward for this is informal presentation at court where he discovers many friends of his father. This does not take place, however, until after he has leaped a high garden wall to escape the plaudits of the crowd, and discovered in the garden a charming lady with whom he falls in love

THE HAND-SHAKING SEASON

With the opening of the University and the seasonal falling ,It's about that time of the year of the autumn leaves on the campus, the handshaking season rolls when you need more than a coat of PUBLIC Speaking 104f or Argumenaround again as the campus politician purchases a supply of cigars and gum in preparation for the fall term elections.

Already those would-be Tammany leaders have started their to be called in football the same as campaign, although many of them have not quite made up their in basket ball. mind just what they would like to campaign for this fall; but nevertheless, they have decided to try to grab off some political office when the election is held the third Tuesday in October.

From the sedate and conservative campus student, the wouldbe political boss has blossomed forth as a democratic person, with his ready smile and cheery "good morning" for every person he meets on the campus, regardless of whether the person is a freshman or a dignified fourth year student.

Soon there will appear in the campus paper the annual "I may be a freshman, but I can write-up of the politician, and included in it will be the names of sure get the soph's goat sometimes. This often happens, although it is not the rule.

"To make an 'A'," said Dr. Splawn, "you more books. must be able to give back all you have received with the stamp | Height of conscientuousness- |232 to T Hall 5. of your own individuality. To make a 'B' you must be able to give back all that you have received in the same form you receive it. 'C' means that you can give back only portions or fragments of what you received. To graduate with a 'C' average is to enter life with a distinct handicap. A 'C' student is not trained; he loses his chance for culture, and remains a halting ignoramus."

There can be no question of the truth of this statement if it may be assumed that the student enters upon his university career with the conviction that marks are the soul criterion of his progress, and is, therefore, determined to make high marks. Inability to make good marks, then, is an indication of a failure on his part in the purpose to which he has addressed himself. This is doubtlessly the viewpoint of the average student, if he has any serious purpose at all in mind. But, aside from the relatively small class of avowed campus loafers, there are exceptions to this general rule. There is the instance of the brilliant blockhead, the man who graduates nearer the foot than the head of his class, but who, nevertheless, through some mysterious process, seems to find himself, upon leaving his university, and surpasses the valedictorian in actual achievement.

There are so many conspicuous instances varying from the general rule that mention of one or two cannot be set down as freak exceptions that only prove the dule. Ulysses S. Grant was the goat of his class at West Point. But at Fort Donaldson, when he pitted his generalship against that of his old classmate, the brilliant Buel, he proved himself anything but a halting igno-

A careful reading of Grant's memories will give the clue to this apparent inconsistency. Grant had a rare mathematical mind. He could fulfill the requirements of the Military Academy as to mathematics with little effort. For the rest he spent his time in the library reading the great classics of literature and history. His entire career at the Academy was one of rebellion against any form of discipline. He always received the maximum number of demerits, and he was deprived of his chevrons in his third year for insubordination. He refused either to let his professors interfere with his education or his superior officers to dictate as to his habits of living.

Robert E. Lee, on the other hand, was one of those brilliant, tractable students who enter an institution of learning to be educated by the appointed teaching staff and not to educate themselves. His was an exemplary record, and he graduated at the head of his class. Lee is the classic example of an "A" student. Grant is the example of a poor "C" student who is determined to educate himself and who upsets all attempts at classifying and grouping the intellect according to formal standards.

But, despite the foregoing exception and countless others that might be mentioned, President Splawn's characterization is, in the main, correct. Its difficulty of application is due only to the fact that no system of education has been evolved which can strike a proper balance between the tendency toward standardization, compelled by large and unselected masses of student, and, at the same time, make proper allowances for the student who brings distinctive and truly original powers of intellect to bear on his work, but who will not, or cannot, fit into the group of average mediocrity. As education is handed to the throngs that overcrowd our state universities, this type of student is a greater incubus than the loafing blockhead.

Thus, while the majority of "C" students will go forth into the world having missed their chance for culture, there may be a few "C" students who have developed amazing powers of reason, not by sitting in the lecture room and transforming themselves into note taking machines, but by criticising in their own minds, everything the lecturer says and doing it intelligently, often brilliantly. Their marks at the final examination will depend largely upon the breadth of mind of the professor giving the course. If the professor in question is only a professor, and not a first rate intellect, the mark, despite every evidence of an ability to think, will be only a "C". There are as many mere professors in our universities as there are brilliant, "C" average blockheads.

The Interscholastic League State Executive Committee, appointed by the president to serve the 1925-20 session, is as follows:

Thomas H. Shelby, chairman; Roy Bedichek, W. A. Felsing, Roy P. Henderson, R. A. Cox, B. C. Tharp. H. P. Bybee, R. A. Law and L. I. Nelson. Felsing, Cox, and Tharp are new members. Reports have been filed from 40 counties of local officers elected to conduct county league contests. More than 220 counties organized for membership in the league last year.

Football Still Open

Roy B. Henderson, athletic director for Interscholast'c League, stated that the state football championship contest would be open to entries until October 1. To date more than 250 schools have compiled with the terms of membership. No school may sign until it has accepted the plan worked out by the league officials for determining the state champion consisting of a code, a division of the state into sections, and 16 rules of procedure and conduct to be ob served in contest relations.
