

Suit may harm department reputation

UT classics program hurt by Gold's charges, educators say

By FELICIA ARAMENDIA
Daily Texan Staff

Accusations of sexual harassment and discrimination against the chairman of the UT Department of Classics by two assistant professors may harm the department's national reputation, even though none of the accusations have been proved.

Barbara Gold, a UT assistant professor of classics, filed a $1 million lawsuit in federal court June 3 contending she was denied tenure because she refused to acquiesce to sexual advances by department Chairman Karl Galinsky and other tenured members of the department.

Both the University and Galinsky are named as defendants in the suit.

The lawsuit came after a grievance Gold filed against Galinsky in 1985 was not upheld by the Faculty Grievance Committee. The UT Affirmative Action Office also investigated Gold's accusations and found the charges to be unsupported by the evidence, Galinsky said.

After Gold's contract with the University ends in August 1986, she will begin duties at a university in California.

In 1982, an assistant professor — Teri Marsh — made a similar complaint of sexual harassment against Galinsky. She also was denied tenure and is now at Wake Forest University in North Carolina.

Phyllis Culham, associate professor of history at the U.S. Naval Academy, said knowledge of the sexual harassment complaints in the UT classics department extends beyond Austin.

"A pattern of such complaints makes (a department) much less attractive to faculty in general," said Culham, former co-chairperson of the Women's Classics Caucus of the American Philological Association.

"I think it would be fair to say it's a situation of great concern among many classicists," Culham said. "Certainly the Women's Classics Caucus (of the APA) would be familiar with this. From phone calls and letters I have gotten, you have a large group of women ... most of whom know about this and are concerned about it," she said.

A past chairman of the UT Department of Classics, William Arrowsmith, said Monday the 1985 grievance filed by Gold was a topic of conversation at the Classical Association of the Middle West and South spring meeting in Tennessee.

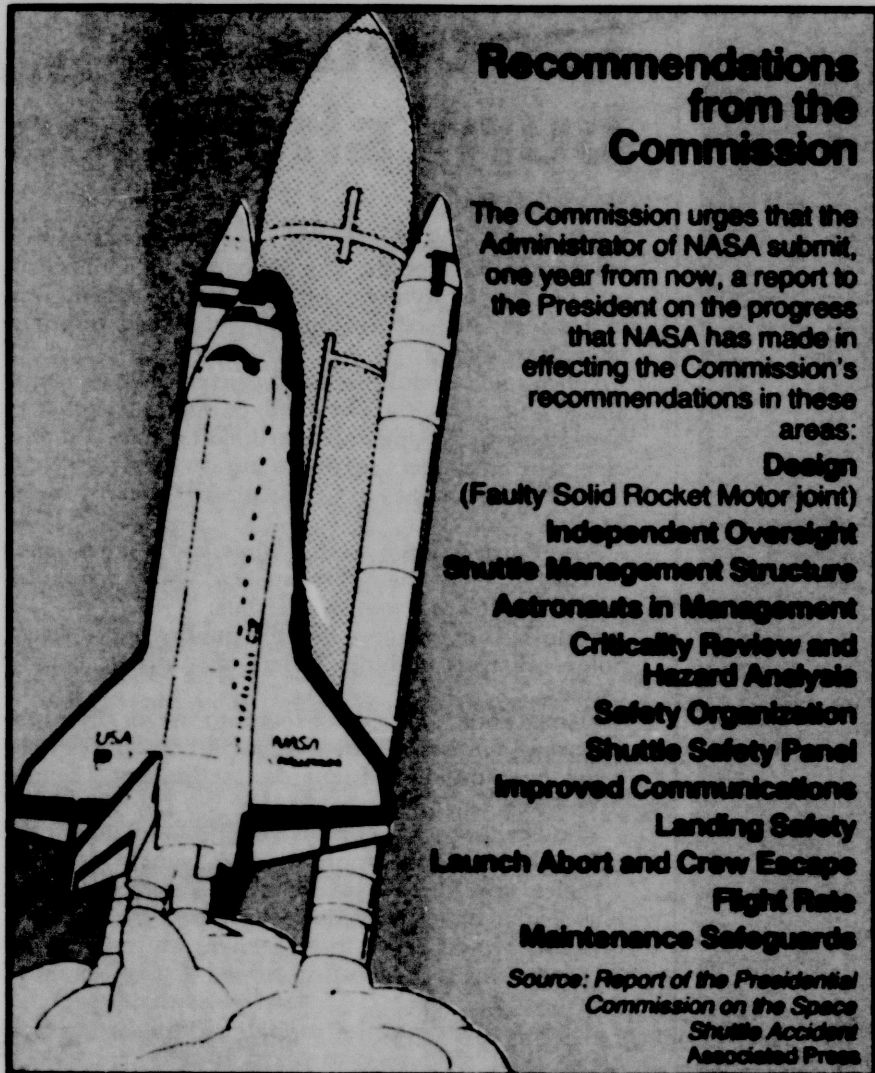

"I know about it," he said. "The word is already out. They were discussing the complaint in the halls." Arrowsmith, now the Robert Woodruff professor of classics and comparative literature at Emory University in Georgia, was with the University from 1958 to 1970.

"I think it will adversely affect the department if the charges are proven," Arrowsmith said.

Harry Evans, professor of classics at Fordham University in New York City and secretary of the APA, said Monday, "Yes, I have been aware that there have been complaints filed" against Galinsky.

Evans said the APA, as a matter of principle, does not get involved in tenure cases or lawsuits unless a classics program is at risk of being abolished.

Shuttle commission pinpoints problem

NASA must return to safety-first policy

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Rogers Commission said Monday a breached booster rocket joint destroyed the space shuttle Challenger, and that NASA must return to the safety-first policy of the Apollo moonflight days.

James Fletcher, a former head of NASA only five weeks into his second stint at the helm, promised to respond to the conclusions "with an open mind and without reservations."

The commission called the Jan. 28 Challenger tragedy, which claimed seven lives, "an accident rooted in history."

William Rogers, chairman of the presidential investigative panel, said, "We know exactly how this accident occurred. I certainly hope there will be no nagging questions."

The commission was not asked to assess blame "and we have not assessed blame," Rogers told a news conference. "Obviously, there was a serious failure. We are not going to go beyond that."

President Reagan, formally accepting the report, said that because of the commission's work "our shuttle program will be safer and better prepared for the challenges that lie ahead."

Because Americans "don't hide our mistakes, we are not condemned to repeat them," Reagan told members of the commission and others gathered in the Rose Garden.

"There's enough blame to go around," he said. "The fault was not with any single person or group. It was NASA's fault. I don't think we should be assigning blame. We should be assigning people to fix what went wrong, and make sure it doesn't happen again."

Fletcher told a late afternoon news conference that the space agency regards July 1987 as a realistic goal — "not an optimistic one" — for resumption of shuttle flights, based on all the recommendations made by the commission.

One of the commission's recommendations, the appointment of an independent committee of experts to review any new booster designs, came into fruition Monday, when the National Research Council announced formation of a panel of experts in the fields of propulsion, materials, reliability and aerospace engineering.

Free speech issue aired at hearing

By LORRAINE CADEMARTORI

The ad hoc committee created by UT President William Cunningham to study possible rule changes regarding free speech met for its first public hearing Monday.

The committee, headed by UT Law School Dean Mark Yudof, heard two hours of testimony from students, faculty, lawyers and Austin citizens concerning the arrests of students at the spring anti-apartheid rallies, the conduct of the UT Police Department during the arrests and the limits put on free speech at the University.

Many speakers questioned the University's current policy of restricting demonstrations on the West Mall to between noon and 1 p.m., ostensibly to prevent the disturbance of classes and University activities.

"The University should be a marketplace of ideas," said Virginia Raymond, UT law graduate and member of the National Lawyers' Guild. "It should be the location of public discussion of public issues."

Former Daily Texan editor Russell Scott cited a Texan poll published in May which found that most employees working in offices on the West Mall were not disturbed by the demonstrations.

"The old rule is antiquated," Scott said. "The rule was brought forth in a restrictive time."

Both Scott and Brett Campbell, second-year law student, asked the committee to look into the possibility of expanding the free speech area to include the South Mall.

"The questions regarding the noise affecting classroom buildings were answered, in my mind, because of the distance of the buildings from the actual gatherings," Scott said.

Court rejects 'Baby Doe' regulations

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, striking down the Reagan administration's "Baby Doe" regulations, said Monday the federal government cannot challenge life-or-death decisions parents make for babies with severe birth defects.

By a 5-3 vote, the court said the administration improperly attempted to override parental wishes and pressure hospitals and doctors to provide medical care that might extend the lives of deformed or gravely ill babies.

The decision, sparked by highly publicized cases in Indiana and New York, will not affect existing state laws that regulate decisions made by doctors and parents in such cases. Officials in some states may override parental wishes.

Justice Department lawyers had urged the court to rule that the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 gives federal regulators the power to make sure no hospital receiving federal money denies nourishment or medical treatment to a child "solely because of its handicap."

Rejecting that argument, the court said the 1973 law does not apply — and the federal government can play no role — when parents do not consent to treatment for their child.

"The court has vindicated the position we've taken all along against government intrusion in the hospital nursery," said Richard Epstein of the American Hospital Association.

But Thomas Marzen of the National Legal Center for the Medically Dependent and Disabled said, "I think you can anticipate there will be some attempt to amend the federal law."

Justice Department spokesman Terry Eastland said that "we wished the decision had gone otherwise," but that government lawyers saw "a note of optimism" in it.

New "regulations in this area have not been foreclosed," only the current set of rules, Eastland said.

Writing for four members of the court, Justice John Paul Stevens said the administration's view of the law amounted to a "manifestly incorrect perception."

Stevens said hospitals do not violate federal law when complying with parental wishes to withhold treatment. And he added hospitals are not required by federal law to report parental refusal of life-saving treatments for their infants.

"By itself, (the 1973 law) imposes no duty to report instances of medical neglect," Stevens said.

Austrian leader resigns; others may follow

Associated Press

VIENNA, Austria — The Socialist government changed leaders Monday, a day after an increasingly disenchanted electorate gave conservative Kurt Waldheim a solid victory over the Socialists' presidential candidate.

Fred Sinowatz, 57, resigned as chancellor after a six-hour meeting of the Socialist Party leadership. He said he would devote himself to his duties as party chairman and prepare for parliamentary elections next April.

He was replaced by Franz Vranitzky, the 48-year-old finance minister, who is scheduled to visit the United States in two weeks. "I do not rule out other changes in the government," Vranitzky said.

The move was seen as an effort by the UT professors react to Waldheim's victory, page 5.

Socialists, who have governed for 16 years, to halt a conservative trend and restructure the government before the elections. Political power in Austria rests with the chancellor, who is chosen by the parliamentary majority, not in the largely ceremonial presidency.

Austrian television called the resignation "a domestic policy bomb."

Waldheim, backed by the conservative Austrian People's Party, won 53.9 percent of the vote in Sunday's presidential election to 46.1 percent for Kurt Steyrer, the Socialist candidate.

The former U.N. secretary-general was dogged throughout the campaign by foreign accusations that he knew about Nazi war crimes and lied about serving as a German army lieutenant in the Balkans during World War II. He denies any wrongdoing.

Many voters focused on domestic issues. The government has been plagued in recent years by accusations of waste, inefficiency and fostering a top-heavy bureaucracy.

Waldheim, who will be sworn into office July 8 replacing Rudolf Kirchschlaeger, maintained Monday that Austria's reputation remains "excellent" despite the accusations surrounding his campaign.

"Just because of some criticism by the media of some developments, one should not believe that the Austrian image has suffered," he said. "Many countries have their problems."

Israel recalled its ambassador for consultations to protest his election, but Waldheim said: "I am of course interested to maintain friendly relations with Israel, as I have in the past. I do not see any real problems in this regard."

Sinowatz, who led the government for more than three years, said Waldheim's victory played a role in his decision to resign but it also stemmed from Socialist setbacks in recent regional and local elections.

"I believe one must have the strength, depending on the development, on the political situation and on the expediency, also to break with habits that have been maintained so far," he said. The last reference was to the tradition of having one person hold both the party and government leadership.

Vranitzky said he would continue "the social network" of government support of ailing industries and the poor, and creation of new jobs, but he made clear that government subsidies for deficit-ridden industries will not continue forever.

He said the government had paid almost 30 billion schillings (nearly $2 billion) "to ensure the viability" of nationalized industries and some other enterprises.

The new chancellor is former director-general of Laenderbank, Austria's second-largest nationalized bank, and joined the government in September 1984. He has gained a reputation as a capable financier and a good administrator.

He said Kirchschlaeger would swear in his new government Monday.

Middle East advice offered by Hussein

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — King Hussein of Jordan suggested to President Reagan some possible new avenues toward a Middle East peace settlement Monday, U.S. officials said, but there were no indications the two leaders found a way to break the Arab-Israeli deadlock.

A senior administration official, briefing reporters at the White House after the private talks, said Hussein suggested "some things...that relate to how things might move forward, but there are specifics that I just can't get into at this point in time."

The Mideast peace process has been stalled for years, and Hussein's latest effort to initiate some movement by taking the Palestine Liberation Organization to the negotiating table with Israel and world leaders collapsed in February.

"While that particular road now seems closed, we and Jordan remain committed to the continuing search for peace in the region," said the official, who spoke only on the condition he not be identified.

"Throughout these difficult months, our very longstanding ties and our concern for the security and the prosperity of Jordan have not wavered, nor will it," the official said.

"We remain as convinced as ever we were that Jordan is a trustful friend, and the president has just reaffirmed to the king that trust and that friendship in their meeting," he said.

The official indicated that Hussein had offered a number of suggestions, but he refused to disclose any details.

"We've been keeping in very close touch with the king, the Israeli leadership, the Egyptian leadership, and collecting ideas from them, looking at what we think can be done, but we're not laying any plan on them at this moment in time," the official said.

Nor was there any indication that the Reagan administration might renew its effort to sell advanced fighter planes, missiles and armored personnel carriers to Jordan.

Facing overwhelming opposition in Congress and strong objections from the Israeli government, the administration pulled back the arms sale package in February before Congress could kill the deal. A much more modest package for Saudi Arabia squeezed by Congress last Thursday by a one-vote margin.

The Jordan deal remains "in a state of suspension," one U.S. official said.

Neither leader would answer reporters' questions as the two posed for pictures in the White House Oval Office at the start of their meeting. They conferred alone for about 15 minutes, and then joined their advisers for further discussions that lasted about 45 minutes.

Hussein was expected to pursue his ideas later in the day in separate meetings with Vice President George Bush, Secretary of State George Shultz and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger.

U.S. officials had not expected that Hussein's meeting with Reagan, arranged at Reagan's request during the king's unofficial visit to the United States, would produce any significant progress toward a Mideast settlement.

Hussein came to the United States to attend the graduations of his twin daughters, Princess Zein and Princess Aisha, from separate New England boarding schools and to get a medical checkup at the Cleveland Clinic.

The king announced in February that the PLO had failed to meet its commitments to him and that he was abandoning a year-long effort to work with PLO leader Arafat toward making peace with Israel.

Jet ordered down at Peruvian airport

Associated Press

LIMA, Peru — Officials here said a Peruvian warplane forced a Pan Am jumbo jet to land at the Lima airport Monday after the American plane violated Peru's air space.

In New York, Pan Am spokesman Jeff Kreindler said the Boeing 747 with 90 passengers was ordered down but he had no report that it had been forced to land by a military plane. He said the plane, Flight 210 from Santiago, Chile, to Los Angeles, was held for more than seven hours and then departed for California. The flight had originated in Buenos Aires, Argentina.

Airport police told reporters the plane departed for Los Angeles at 3 p.m. after a fine of $5,000 was paid.

Kreindler said the incident occurred after "an error was made in filing the flight plan between Santiago and Acapulco to have the aircraft overly Peruvian air space."

The crew correctly followed the erroneous flight plan, he said.

The Peruvian officials, who spoke on the condition that they not be identified, said the jetliner was intercepted by an air force jet fighter and landed here at 7 a.m.

Felix Ortello, an Argentine journalist on the Pan American World Airways flight, told reporters that on a normal Santiago-to-Los Angeles flight the plane would have flown out over the Pacific Ocean after leaving Chile and would not have been near Peruvian air space.

AT&T, striking union wage ad battle against each other

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — With little progress to show at the bargaining table, American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and 155,000 striking members of its largest employee union have begun waging newspaper advertising campaigns against each other.

Federal mediators shuttled between management and union negotiators during the weekend in an effort to keep discussions alive, and "some movement" was reported by spokesmen for both sides.

"But it seems to be dug in right now," said Rozanne Weissman, a spokeswoman for the Communications Workers of America, Monday, the ninth day of the strike.

It also was the third day that negotiators decided they had nothing to say directly to each other.

"There's not much going on," said Herb Linnen, an AT&T spokesman. "The important thing is that the intervention of the federal mediators helped generate a dialogue between the two sides which toward the end of last week had stopped."

Linnen and Weissman said the heads of their negotiating teams were on call Monday for new approaches from either side or from Kay McMurray, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service.

The union struck AT&T on June 1 after rejecting an offer of an 8 percent wage increase over the next three years. That offer would eliminate annual cost-of-living adjustments that had been an integral part of telephone workers' wage packages since 1972.

The union said its ad, costing $31,000, was in response to similar ads by AT&T in 45 newspapers on Friday and Saturday that termed the company's proposal "a fair offer to the best people in the business."

House committee chair fined for driving while intoxicated

RACINE, Wis. — Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, the House Ways and Means Committee chairman, was fined $555 Monday after pleading guilty to drunken driving while returning from a high school reunion.

The Illinois Democrat did not appear in Racine County Traffic and Misdemeanor Court, but was represented by Milwaukee attorney David Lowe.

Under state law for first-time drunken driving offenders, Rostenkowski's Wisconsin driving privileges were automatically suspended for six months. He also will not be allowed to drive in Illinois for a year, Lowe said.

The 58-year-old Rostenkowski was arrested June 1 by a Racine County sheriff's deputy, who had stopped him initially for speeding. He was returning from the 40th reunion of his high school class at St. John's Military Academy in Delafield.

Rostenkowski failed portions of a field sobriety test and refused a breath test. In exchange for his plea, a charge of refusing the breath test was dropped.

At a Chicago news conference last week, Rostenkowski said he would plead guilty to the charge. Accordingly, his June 16 court date was advanced, Lowe said. Rostenkowski failed portions of a field sobriety test and refused a breath test. In exchange for his plea, a charge of refusing the breath test was dropped.

Congressmen urge ban on tobacco ads

WASHINGTON — Arguing that cigarette advertising is not protected by the First Amendment, seven congressmen Monday introduced legislation to ban all forms of tobacco promotion, including newspaper and magazine ads, athletic sponsorships, billboards, posters and even matchbook covers.

"The right to commercial free speech is not absolute," said Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okla., the principal sponsor. "Congress has the authority to limit commercial speech when a substantial government interest is involved."

"One could hardly imagine an issue of greater government concern than the loss of 350,000 lives annually from a single product," Synar added.

But the bill was immediately attacked by the Tobacco Institute, the trade association for cigarette manufacturers. Spokesman Scott Stapf called the proposal "blatantly unconstitutional," a view shared by the American Civil Liberties Union.

Letters presented in espionage trial

SAN FRANCISCO — Four anonymous letters sent to the FBI in which the writer confessed to spying for the Soviet Union and sought immunity were introduced as evidence Monday in an espionage case against Jerry Whitworth.

U.S. District Court Judge John Vukasin admitted the letters over the objections of defense lawyers, who contend the prosecution failed to show any connection between the letters and Whitworth.

Vukasin had ruled earlier that although the FBI failed to identify the source of the letters, their relevance to the case was shown by their contents, which match many details of the espionage ring led by confessed spy John Walker Jr.

The judge said jurors could disregard the letters, signed "RUS" and received between May and August 1984, unless they decided Whitworth was the author. The letters were introduced as prosecutors began the 10th and final week of their case.

Iraqi warplanes strike oil tanker again

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Missile-firing Iraqi warplanes struck a Liberian-registered oil tanker Monday that had been crippled 30 hours earlier in a raid, Persian Gulf shipping executives reported.

They said the tanker Energy Mobility was hit by missiles as it was being towed to an Iranian port in the northeastern gulf.

The executives, speaking on condition they not be identified, said it was difficult to send tugboats to help the stricken vessel because it had no communications with Iran.

They said radio communications were disrupted by Iraqi air raids Sunday on the Sadabad control and communications stations that serve western Iran.

The tanker had first been struck by Iraqi missiles in a May 6 attack.

The tanker is part of the fleet Iran has commissioned to shuttle oil from its major terminal on Kharg Island in the northern Persian Gulf to safer export outlets.

One executive, who contacted Iranian shipping officials via Europe, said he was told a fire started on board the 223,911-ton tanker in the first raid at midnight Saturday had been extinguished.

Legion of Doom members sentenced

Associated Press

FORT WORTH — Seven members of a high school vigilante group known as the Legion of Doom were sentenced Monday to a variety of probation and jail terms that a judge said were designed to show their acts were "never justifiable."

Five of the youths will spend some time in jail — four of them for 30 days — in addition to their probation terms, state District Judge Don Leonard said.

presented the SA Task Force's report on public demonstrations. The report stated the official Students' Association position is that restraints regarding free speech and "peaceable, orderly assembly" on the West Mall should be removed, and called for a dismissal of all disciplinary charges against any students or faculty as a result of the arrests.

The task force requested that the committee re-evaluate current limitations on free speech areas, specifically the Texas Union patio.

"The patio ... is neither structurally nor managerially suited to regular use for public assembly," the report said. "The task force believes that public use of the West Mall and Main Mall would not significantly increase the potential for unreasonable disturbance or interference with normal operations and activities of the University."

Gold

He said an organization such as the American Association of University Professors was better suited to take up issues such as professional conduct.

"We consider ourselves a learned society. We don't get involved except when a program is endangered. Even then, we can't do much except express concern," Evans said.

However, the APA board of directors voted to send an observer to the Faculty Grievance Committee hearings when Gold's complaint against Galinsky was heard in 1985.

"This was a very unusual procedure," Evans said. "A majority felt that it warranted sending an observer. I can't go into the individual discussion, but a majority felt it was warranted in this case."

William Anderson, professor of Latin and comparative literature at the University of California at Berkeley, attended Gold's hearing as an observer at the request of the APA.

Anderson said Monday his function was to determine the fairness of the grievance proceeding with regard to the study of classics.

"It was an eminently fair hearing in terms of classics," Anderson said.

John Sullivan, professor of classics at the University of California at Santa Barbara, said he was not aware of accusations of sexual harassment at the UT department Legion of Doom members, including honor students, said they sought to eliminate petty crime and drug abuse at the 2,100-student Paschal High School by intimidating people they perceived as wrongdoers.

The swastika-toting group's methods drew fire after they pipe-bombed a car and killed a cat that was left in a student's car as a threat in early 1985.

Leonard's sentences were based on 10 incidents that involved 17 felonies and 16 misdemeanors by nine students and recent Paschal graduates. Besides the seven sentenced Monday, an eighth was a juvenile and the ninth had no felony violation, the judge said. Those last two cases are still pending.

"My main concern was there had been a lot of talk that they were some way indirectly justified in what they did," Leonard said. "But I wanted to quash that. Violence is never justifiable unless you're under attack."

David Richey, a member of the UT Young Democrats, said the necessity of obtaining a demonstration permit from the Dean of Students office hinders spontaneous protests.

"Spontaneous demonstrations are not allowed except on the Union patio," limiting access to information, Richey said.

Thomas Philpott, associate professor of history, said, "It has been my experience at the University of Texas that those of us who want to speak freely and encourage others to do so are the ones who have to defend ourselves against suspicion that we're up to something that's disruptive and unbusinesslike."

Philpott, the only faculty member arrested at the anti-apartheid rallies, also said the presence of police at the rallies was a threat to peaceful demonstrating.

"I felt the situation was a danger to the students," he said. "I value the presence of a police on the campus, because of the threat of students being dangerous to each other, as sometimes happens."

"But in this case," he said, "students who follow their consciences are threatened."

Ravi Jain, graduate student in computer science, attacked the videotaping by administration officials at the rallies, claiming it was done as an intimidation ploy.

"Videotaping was designed to harass and intimidate students who felt they had to speak their minds."

"Foreign students are especially intimidated by this because they think it might affect their status," Jain said. "They're afraid of the power of the University of Texas at Austin, and they're afraid of the power of the United States government."

and said the issue of how tenure is granted was of much greater importance.

"If you felt anything other than the strictest intellectual standard was used, then of course it would make everybody frightened that they wouldn't get a fair deal. The cause — free speech, whatever — would be irrelevant," Smith said.

Attorney Barry Odell said Monday that Galinsky was served with official notification of the suit June 5, and the University was served June 6. Each has 20 days to file an answer to the allegations in the suit, after which discovery proceedings can begin, Odell said.

As a state agency, the University will be defended by the attorney general's civil rights section of the state and county affairs division. Galinsky, as an employee of a state agency, also is entitled to defense counsel by the attorney general, according to Susan Bradshaw, general attorney for the office of general counsel for the University of Texas System.

Galinsky refused to comment Monday on whether he will also retain a private attorney. Neither would he comment on any other aspect of the lawsuit.

University officials also refused comment Monday or were unavailable for comment.

Space age intimidation

Don't film protesters if they haven't broken any rules

Back in the old days, people used a pencil and paper to write down the names of people they considered potentially dangerous. Nowadays they're more efficient — they use videotape. Friday, everyone who showed up at the regents meeting in Austin to protest the University's non-divestiture stance were followed around and videotaped by a University employee.

Now, this is nothing new for the University. Videotaping came into vogue during the recent free speech-divestiture protests on the West Mall. But there is one important difference. Last semester the University was videotaping students who were breaking University rules.

The University's actions Friday are a different matter. There are no regulations prohibiting demonstrations outside of regents' meetings. The protesters weren't breaking any rules.

What the protesters were doing was being a pain in the butt to the University administration, the same as they have been since April. And what the University was doing was making a visual list of "trouble makers" for future reference.

The message was clear: Go ahead and protest. But if you do something later that we don't like, we know who you are. If a student is accused by the University of breaking some rule or regulation a couple of years down the road, the implication is he just might be treated differently because he's on videotape as being a troublemaker.

Which brings up the second problem. The demonstrators showed up at the regents meeting to protest UT policies. To suddenly have a camera thrust in your face intimidates students who are exercising their right to express themselves freely. Taping protesters — the same policy the University is following to identify students who actually are breaking UT regulations — implies the students' actions are wrong and could get them in trouble.

UT officials claim the students were videotaped so the University would have a record if anything illegal did happen. Come on. It seems awfully coincidental the practice was started just as the protest movement started to pick up steam.

Monitoring protesters who weren't doing anything wrong was a classic intimidation tactic in the 1960s. It shouldn't be started up again in the 1980s.

From our readers

Mike Kelley explains how to write a Firing Line letter

One of our readers — a Mr. Mike Kelley, who writes humor columns for the Austin American Statesman — wrote in regarding a recent advertisement concerning the dearth of Firing Line letters at our beloved student paper. As hap-penstance would have it, he wrote this article in his space in Friday's Statesman, which he certainly has the right to do.

Some people have criticized Mr. Kelley, saying he often runs a column written by someone else in his space and puts his byline on it. We at the Texan abhor this practice. Here is Mr. Kelley's column.

This may be unprecedented. "Firing Line," the letters-to-the-editor column of The Daily Texan, is low on fuel. The summer Texan began publication this week and each day's edition has carried a plea for more mail. This is not good.

The letters section is one of my favorite parts of any newspaper, but especially the Texan's. The dudgeon of its correspondents is always in high orbit. They do not take ink-dipped dirk in hand before popping several caplets of some ganglion-nuking substance while listening to The Star Spangled Banner as performed by Black Sabbath. You get addicted to it.

Perhaps there are too many new students on the campus who aren't yet accustomed to this fine old tradition. If it's simply pump-priming that's needed, here is something like a generic "Firing Line" contribution:

To The Editor:
Vomit.

The cowering crypto-Nazis who arrogantly and mendaciously hold themselves out as "administrators" of this never-was-and-never-will-be university of the first class should line up and volunteer for laboratory experiments, as they are lower than the white mice currently used and could save everyone some time and money. These self-styled lords of learning, whose ethical forebears were once driven from a certain temple, have purposefully and consistently turned blind eyes to the crucial, critical, sickening, number one problem on this great campus, which as any thinking person knows is bicycle parking spaces where you can't see the lines when it's raining! Thomas Jefferson said that this country ought to have a revolution every once in a while and I think I know what he had in mind when he said that. If you were running a newspaper instead of being the administration mouthpiece, something might have been done about this a long time ago!

I have to add that your movie critic was right on target in her brave endorsement of Bliss, especially considering the wave of anti-Australian hysteria that seems to be sweeping much of the frat and sorority communities. The Texan was in the forefront of those decrying the gay-bashing by those Gold Card-carrying creeps a little while back, so where are you when it's the Aussies who are bearing the brunt? Hm? In fact, when was the last time the Texan had one little word to say about people singing mocking words to Waltzing Matilda? Where exactly were you during World War II, Mr. Editor? Your sports writers are the best I've seen.

And since Australians are real hard to tell from South Africans, that reminds me that you deserve kudos for your continuing support of divestiture by the University. You have held the gaseous, callous regents' feet to the fire through your lucid yet bold editorial stance explaining why no university worthy of the name can continue to be party to the crime of apartheid while maintaining a pretense of morality. You also clearly hate blacks. Your abysmal lack of coverage of the black experience on this campus reveals in all its corruption the festering wound of racism which you have attempted to camouflage under the gauze of your transparent, whiteny, neoliberal whining. Your music reviews are great.

How you can face yourselves, each other or anyone else while continuing your peevish attacks on the Students' Association is simply appalling. You harp constantly on the fact that our elected student leadership was chosen by only 13 percent of the student body, one of whom I'm proud to say I am. Where do you get off shrieking your lungs out all the time that everybody should vote? Who are you to tell other people what to do? What a bunch of elitists! Please keep running the hilarious comic strip Squib.

All the awards you people have won should be melted down and poured over your limp-wristed, Commie-ideology-carrying carcasses, which might finally free this university from whatever disgusting diseases and perversions you want to infect the rest of us with, despite your excellent series on teacher education which I found to be thorough and highly informative.

In summation, you should be roundly congratulated, taken out and shot.

So thanks, Mr. Kelley. And you should be revered by all, sliced, diced and nuked.

Teachers should back White

Come November, the reputation of the state's largest teachers' group will be on the line.

The 97,000-member Texas State Teachers Association has not decided whether it will endorse Gov. Mark White in his race against Bill Clements, or whether it will sit out a campaign for the first time since it began endorsing candidates for governor in 1978.

Although a Clements endorsement is out of the picture, failure to endorse White in what is expected to be an extremely close race could be a boost for the former governor.

In contrast to TSTA's whining over the issue of competency testing stands the rival Texas Federation of Teachers, led by President John Cole. While TFT has yet to endorse in the governor's race, Cole said he has no doubt that that most TFT members will support the incumbent.

The question remains just what role, if any, TSTA's 97,000 members will play in the campaign. "I have been told (TSTA leaders) have said privately to the White campaign that they would endorse White, but they continue to campaign around the state against him in their statewide and local publications," Cole said. "If I were to make a prediction, I'd say they'll sit this one out."

That would be unfortunate.

DAVID ELLIOT
TEXAN COLUMNIST

// TSTA members enjoyed the average $5,000 annual increase they received since White took office. //

TSTA leaders seem to have forgotten that the competency examinations — which about 97 percent of Texas teachers passed — represented a necessary tradeoff in order for teachers to secure significant pay raises.

Because of state leaders' no-new-taxes rhetoric, it would have been impossible to support an increase in the state sales tax — the mechanism which funded a hefty salary increase for educators — without convincing the public any incompetent teachers in Texas would be weeded out.

During the special session, TSTA wanted to take the money and run — a head-in-the-sand attitude which, sadly, remains characteristic of the group's leadership. TSTA members enjoyed the average $5,000 annual increase they received since White took office. But ever since the famed "Even-a-dog-knows-when-it's-been-kicked" quote issued by then-TSTA President Becky

Brooks in the waning hours of the special legislative session, TSTA has misused the competency tests to install panic and hysteria in its members — an attitude which has hurt the image of all teachers.

At least, TSTA President Charles Beard admits Clements' record on education is less than pristine. "I don't believe his campaign propaganda that he was responsible for a 49 percent pay increase," Beard says.

Actually, teachers did receive an average 49 percent pay increase, but Clements was hardly the man responsible. While the state's work force was laboring under a recession-era double digit inflation, Clements pushed for a 1 percent increase in teacher salaries for the 1980-81 biennium. Local school districts made up the other 48 percent. And, to make matters worse, Clements pushed through House Bill 246, which inundated educators with mounds and mounds of paper work — a problem which White worked to correct during the 1985 Legislature.

Overall, Clements' record on education is abysmal. Which makes TSTA's intransigence all the more puzzling — and quite unbecoming for a group whose primary business is educating the kids.

'Right' is wrong

When the Texan publishes William Buckley Jr.'s column, as it sometimes does, it thoughtfully provides the column with the sub-heading "On the Right." I suggest that it is wrong to give a column a political label and that the label is wrong.

Labeling the column is wrong because it's an attempt to prejudice the reader's view of the column. Most people, including students, are quite capable of forming their own opinion of what they read. Furthermore, if Buckley's column is labeled, then some other columns that appear in the Texan also need labeling: "On the Left, On the Far Left, etc." as appropriate.

The label itself is wrong. "The right" identifies a tendency which at its extremes becomes fascism, while "the left" identifies a tendency which at its extreme becomes communism. Both distinctions are valid but they are distinctions within the larger concept of socialism.

Nazism, for example, was fascist but it was also socialist. The word "Nazi" is a phonetic contraction, in German, of the first two words of National Socialist German Workers' Party, which was the full name of the Nazi party. Slogans of Nazi propaganda, such as "The common good before the individual good," show that the Nazis were socialist in practice as well as in name.

Buckley is not a socialist of any description so the label "On the Right" is wrong because it's irrelevant.

I request that the Texan continue to publish Buckley's column, but without any political label.

Lowbrow shuttle

On Monday we, the readers, had the bad luck of encountering the very first racist letter of the semester.

True, it is only a summer semester, yet my paper got wet all over from dripping musical racism originating in the Firing Line section.

Musical racism? It is really very simple: The writer was claiming a shuttle bus ride that was absolutely refreshing, enjoyable, calming and providing the boost you need while an entire daily load of UT (summer) courses is waiting for you around the corner.

And sure enough, it would not have happened if there had not been classical philharmonic concertism playing on the radio on that morning. Oh, that great, marvelous, cultured, civilized, KMFA — dialist and shuttle bus driver.

That letter implied that those who enjoy other stations on the dial are persons of lower ranks who have no right to be considered as civilized as KMFA listeners.

Special mention was made against rock and roll being over-decibalized by some shuttle bus drivers. True, I cannot stand music which is louder than 5.8 on the Richter scale. But there are also drivers who put KMFA-style noise on their speakers, torturing their riders by excessive loudness. I, for one, get an upset stomach and start looking for the nearest pure oxygen bottle whenever I hear philharmonic "music" around me. I am convinced that the greatest music one can hear on the way to school is none other than the classical LZ II album.

Therefore, KMFA listeners, while pretending to experience a manifestation of "higher culture," do not forget that lower forms of human beings exist too.

KLBJ listeners — drivers and riders — unite!

Buses late for class

After five years of academics and bureaucratic runaround, I thought I saw a light at the end of the tunnel. Silly me, I figured that all I had to do was lay low, take a few more tough courses and I could get my degree and get outta here.

So I gutsied it up and signed up for a class which begins at 7 a.m. Pretty ungodly hour for someone like me, but it seemed worth it and so I prepared myself for six weeks of early rising and no David Letterman.

What could go wrong as long as I disciplined myself? I'll tell you what — the shuttle buses don't start running until 7 a.m.

Now, I know I won't get much sympathy from most UT noon-risers for wanting a bus at 7 a.m., but for crying out loud, I paid for this bus service just like everyone else.

If the University approves a class at 7 a.m., then why don't they make sure that they coordinate the student-paid-for transportation?

This is my only method of transportation from my home to the University.

In the hopes that I might somehow convince the shuttle to run a half an hour earlier, I called the Business Affairs office and the Ombudsman's office. Both were very nice and helpful. However, I was informed by Bill Taylor that it would cost the University another $6,000 to run the shuttle buses 30 minutes earlier than scheduled.

The solution, according to Taylor, seems to require that the class be delayed 15 or 30 minutes if other students are also having this problem.

Hey, I have absolutely no desire to disrupt the class schedule. All I wanted was for the bus schedule to match the course schedule.

If I register for a 7 a.m. class, I'll be there ... if I can get there. Can this kind of absurdity really be happening at a University of the first class?

Court refuses to hear appeal of abortion suit

By BARBARA LINKIN
Daily Texan Staff

The U.S. Supreme Court refused Monday to hear an appeal that challenged the right to perform abortions at the University of Texas Medical School in Houston.

The aim of the appeal, Schwanecke vs. Ali, was to urge the court to overrule the 1973 decision made in Roe vs. Wade, said Richard Schmude, the attorney for the plaintiff in the case. The Roe decision effectively legalized abortion.

Schmude said he believes the Roe decision is unconstitutional on two counts. "First, because the infant victims of abortion are not recognized in the ruling, and second, because the Supreme Court lacks the personal jurisdiction to make such a ruling," Schmude said.

Named as defendants in the appeal were five abortionists and agencies that provide information about abortion. The organizations included Planned Parenthood, Cullen Women's Center, NOVA Health Systems and Hermann Hospital.

Also named in the suit were the University of Texas and Attorney General Jim Mattox.

Schmude said the University was being sued for using public facilities and tax money to perform abortions, which he believes are illegal.

An attorney for the UT System, James Crowson, was unavailable for comment. In addition, the attorney for the UT Medical School in Houston was out of town and could not be reached for comment.

Schmude also said he named Mattox in the suit because the attorney general had used state tax money to defend a doctor who teaches abortion procedures at the University of Texas Medical School.

The suit, which was first filed in 1979, has been dismissed three times since then. In 1979, it was dismissed by a state trial judge. That decision was upheld by a state appeals court. In November 1984, the Texas Supreme Court refused to review the case.

Schwanecke vs. Ali is Schmude's fourth attempt at having Roe vs. Wade overturned. He plans to file another suit, Hoffart vs. the State of Texas, with the Supreme Court next week.

Schmude said Jack Hoffart was convicted of trespassing and harassment after he went to a Houston abortion clinic to try to talk the women there out of having abortions.

"The state of Texas has no business being in the killing business," Schmude said. "This is just another example of cruel and unjust treatment by the court on this issue."

"We do not have equal justice under the law insofar as these victims of abortion are concerned, but we're going to keep fighting."

Program helps keep students in school

By MARTY HOBRATSKCH
Daily Texan Staff

A summer program at the University is helping some Texas students finish high school.

Suzan Armstrong-West, assistant dean of students, said Monday that Youth Opportunities Unlimited is a program designed "to assist students in having a successful high school experience."

This is the second summer YOU has been at the University, said Jake Foley, a YOU resident counselor. The program began in 1984 at three Texas universities, expanded to nine last summer, and is operating at 11 this summer. He said private industry councils pay for students' participation in the program, which is coordinated and sponsored by the governor's office.

Armstrong-West said the program has not been affected by state budget cuts. She also said there are similar federal programs in operation and other states are looking into starting programs of their own.

The 14- and 15-year-old students are enrolled in high-school level math and English courses, for which they receive credit. The students also work 20 hours per week and take non-credit elective courses, among them a computer literacy course.

Cultural enrichment activities like museum tours and group discussions, and recreational sports like swimming and volleyball fill the rest of their free time.

Armstrong-West said besides helping students get through high school, YOU teaches job skills and hopes to encourage post-secondary education through exposure to a college campus atmosphere.

Counselors work with the students, helping them with problems and giving them encouragement, Foley said. "We try to help them overcome the same barriers that we faced in high school," he said.

Jake Foley, second from right, and a Youth Opportunity Program counselor talk with students after summer job interviews Monday.

"It's a lot of work, but the kids are encouraging," said Vicky Jones, a resident counselor. "They really make you want to do it."

Last summer the students came from inner-city areas in Houston and were mostly black, Armstrong-West said. This summer's participants come from more rural areas like Victoria, Tomball and Belton, and are predominantly Hispanic.

Annessa Bess, a student from Victoria, said she came to learn more about work and to meet people. She said she is enjoying herself so far.

"I turned in a job application to the school and they called me and told me about the study and work program here," he said.

Foley said he and other counselors share the philosophy of helping others advance. "I found out about the program last year and decided it was a worthwhile cause," he said.

"This is an opportunity to pass on something I've learned," Jones said. "I wish I had a chance to do something like this when I was 15."

UT government professors assess Waldheim's win

By JEFF STEWART
Daily Texan Staff

UT government professors had mixed reviews Monday of the election of Kurt Waldheim to the Austrian presidency this weekend, despite accusations that Waldheim was involved in Nazi war crimes.

"I think everyone outside of Austria is pretty appalled," said Thomas Ferguson, associate professor of government. "Everyone always said that it was the genius of the Austrians to make everyone think that Hitler was a German and Beethoven was Viennese, and not the other way around. This just proves what a striking piece of public relations that really was. Now we know that the jig is up."

Waldheim, a former United Nations secretary-general, has been accused of complicity in war crimes allegedly committed during his service with the Nazis in World War II.

Accusers say Waldheim had knowledge of atrocities committed against Jews and anti-fascist partisans in the Balkans in 1942 and 1943.

The accusations concerning Waldheim's past may provoke action from other countries, specifically the superpower blocs, said Melvin Hinich, Erwin Centennial professor in government.

"That he could get where he's gotten brings up the question of how many war criminals there may be in other positions," said Hinich. "If he were actually implicated, the Americans or the Soviets might pressure the Austrians and he might fall out."

Hinich said although the reaction of the Soviets was to characterize Waldheim's election as a victory over the U.S. administration and Zionist attempts to influence the results of the presidential race, the Soviets themselves play a threatening role in Austrian politics and may have affected the outcome of the elections.

"If the Soviets had not wanted him there, he wouldn't be where he is," Hinich said.

In order to protest Waldheim's election, Israeli government officials have indicated that Israel's ambassador to Austria will be removed and replaced with a charge d'affaires. The gesture is considered largely symbolic and is expected to have little substantial effect, said John Higley, associate professor of government.

"I don't think it will have much international significance," Higley said. "It is essentially aimed at domestic opinion. It may have been motivated by the internal politics of Israel's coalition government."

"The Israelis are too small and too weak to do much about it," said Hinich.

American reaction to the election has been similarly symbolic, Higley said. With the Justice Department's refusal of an appeal by several congressmen to deny Waldheim entrance into the United States, "the administration has made all the noise they're going to make," Higley said.

"You probably won't see him meeting with President Reagan anytime soon," Higley said. "At least not before the elections."

Overall, reaction seems to be relatively subdued, said James Roach, professor of government.

"Reaction will be minimal," Roach said. "It would be very embarrassing to make an issue of it (Waldheim's past) now. Even the Israelis are saying they couldn't lay their hands on much definitive evidence."

The Austrians themselves seem ready to accept Waldheim as their president, the professors said.

Democrats deny party friction

By SEAN S. PRICE
Daily Texan Staff

Despite sometimes heated arguments among top Democratic officeholders over the fate of more than $800 million in newly acquired state funds, political observers and Texas officials say the dispute shouldn't hurt party unity in the November election.

The money, part of a February 1984 settlement with the federal government over offshore oil and gas revenues, has been at the heart of a dispute involving Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, Land Commissioner Garry Mauro, Attorney General Jim Mattox, Treasurer Ann Richards, Comptroller Bob Bullock and other state officials.

General Land Office spokesman Mike Connolly said Monday the disagreement between Hobby, who favored putting all of the money into general revenue, and Mauro, who said the money legally belonged to the state education fund, produced some "overzealousness" in the staffs of both departments.

After asking for Mattox's legal opinion in the case, Richards moved to put the money into an interest-bearing general revenue account. Mauro then sued Richards, who also received a letter from Bullock ordering her to put the money into the Permanent University Fund. Richards complied.

Mauro announced Friday the conflict had been resolved by sending one-third of the money, $141.6 million, to general revenue and two-thirds, or $283.2 million, to both the Available and Permanent University Funds.

During the next 15 years, $134 million in deferred payments will be similarly split between the general revenue fund and the Permanent University Fund.

Connolly acknowledged press reports that the negotiations necessary to reach the settlement were often factious.

"It may have been more the staff's attitudes than the principles," Connolly said. "There may have been some overzealousness in defending their principles' opinions."

However, Mattox campaign manager Don Buford said there may have been some zeal among officeholders, too.

"I wouldn't be suprised if (Mattox) raised his voice once or twice," Buford said. "Jim is a tough negotiator and he had some strong opinions about where that money should go."

Even so, Buford said the argument wouldn't produce much political fallout.

"The settlement is not a dispute (among the campaigns) in any way," Buford said. "We've been in constant communication with the other campaigns."

Austin political consultant George Christian said the Democrats are not as cohesive as they were in the last election, but essentially agreed with Buford.

"There are a lot of rumors that they don't get along as well as they used to and to an extent that's true," said Christian, a former press secretary to the late President Lyndon Johnson. "I don't think the various officeholders are as united as in 1982, but I don't think this particular disagreement will have any lasting effects."

Bill cuts new housing funds

By RENE CRAFT
Daily Texan Staff

An amendment to a new federal housing and community development bill, which effectively cuts off funding for new low-income housing, leaves the Austin Housing Authority with few, if any, options.

The U.S. House of Representatives voted Thursday 223 to 180 to adopt an amendment that would channel all new federal public housing funds into the renovation of existing housing units rather than construction of new ones.

John Havens, aide to Rep. J.J. "Jake" Pickle, D-Austin, said Monday the amendment is a positive step. "We have more of a need for renovation than construction," he said.

But Bill Petri, member of the Board of Commissioners for the Austin Housing Authority, said the amendment would be a setback. The last project in Austin was built in 1984 and consisted of 42 units.

"I'd rather have new ones," Petri said. "But since Congress won't give the money, it's not better than new but it is better than nothing."

Earline Jewett, chairwoman of the board of commissioners, said the agency has experienced similar cuts during the past four or five years. Because of the budget cuts, the authority has been concentrating on renovation, she said.

Even so, authority officials had hoped to build new units instead of renovating the Booker T. Washington project in East Austin, Jewett said. "If we build something new we have a greater chance of getting 30 or 40 years from it," she said. "Whether we can get 30 or 40 more years from a renovated Booker T. Washington is doubtful."

Lela Gonzales-Carrea, Austin Housing Authority director, said the federal money the agency receives is used for renovation because the funds are insufficient for construction of new units.

But Gonzales-Carrea said she does not believe renovation is always the best alternative. She said some old projects should be torn down and rebuilt. "A 40-year-old project is a 40-year-old project no matter how much money we put into it," Gonzales-Carrea said.

In the case of the Booker T. Washington project, she said it would be better to tear it down and start again because of serious structural problems.

Jewett said Austin's low-income families will be hurt.

"Our inability to increase the number of units prevents us from providing housing for Austin's homeless that quality," Jewett said.

Gonzales-Carrea said the turnover rate at the projects is very slow. "The original goal was to have people use the projects as a way of helping them to get on their feet. Then, they could move out and others could move in, but it hasn't happened this way."

"We have people that have been there all their lives," she said.

Public housing in Austin comprises 1,600 apartments, and Petri said 80 percent of the tenants are single-parent families — usually a woman with children.

EUC calls for gas renegotiations

By DAVID ELDRIDGE
Daily Texan Staff

The Electric Utility Commission recommended Monday that the City Council renegotiate a current contract that charges more than twice the open market price for natural gas.

The EUC recommendation followed criticism of the city's present contract with Valero Energy Corporation.

That contract requires that the city buy 50 percent of its natural gas from Valero at more than twice the open market price.

According to a chart submitted to the commission by Chairman Merle Moden, the City of Austin Electric Utility pays more for natural gas than six other Texas utilities surveyed.

Commission member Bill Oakey said the city should try to renegotiate the contract to reflect the current drop in gas prices.

Oakey also suggested the city consider litigation if negotiations prove unsuccessful.

John Moore, Electric Department director, told the commission that Valero was temporarily offering gas to the city at a reduced price despite the contract.

"They would rather sell the gas to us at a lower price than have us not buying any gas at all," Moore said.

Under the current contract, which runs until 1999, the city and ratepayers cannot benefit from falling gas prices.

On the open market, natural gas now costs less than $2 per million cubic feet. Valero is charging Austin almost $4 per million cubic feet.

Moore said the city could buy its electricity from the Lower Colorado River Authority while negotiating.

Commission members warned that Austin may have little time in negotiating a better contract because gas prices would eventually start climbing again.

Oakey said the possibility of litigation against Valero should be included in the wording of the recommendation to the City Council, but other commission members disagreed and the possible lawsuit was not mentioned in the recommendation.

Oakey said any litigation, which may come later, would be similar to the city's lawsuit against Decker Coal Co. The city and the Lower Colorado River Authority sued Decker in February 1985, contending the company overcharged the city by as much as 600 percent for coal for the Fayette Power Project, located near La Grange.

Suicide threats end peaceably

By SUSAN BABCHICK

Austin Police Department negotiators persuaded an Austin man to leave his apartment early Monday after he barricaded himself inside for five hours, threatening to kill himself.

David Norris, 33, of 6813 Great Northern Blvd. contacted the police and two radio stations at 3 a.m. Monday in a ploy to gain attention from his ex-wife, said Austin police spokeswoman Kellye Norris, who is not related to David Norris. The incident was "marital-based," she said.

David Norris had been divorced for several years and was having trouble coping with the separation, she said. He threatened to shoot himself, but did not threaten anyone else.

"Special missions teams evacuated some apartments immediately adjacent to his," Kellye Norris said.

Officials at the scene included 10 special missions officers and two uniformed police officers. SMT negotiators spoke to David Norris on cellular telephones from their cars and also through the door to his apartment.

Norris' ex-wife was not at the apartments, but he spoke to her on the phone, Kellye Norris said. After he surrendered at 8 a.m., he was not arrested. Authorities took him to police headquarters to speak with a counselor and then took him to the Travis County Mental Health Unit.

"There is no criminal charge" said Lt. Drew McAngus, a spokesman for the TCMHU, who said Norris was "severely depressed." Norris was taken to the Austin State Hospital under 24-hour emergency commitment, McAngus said. After 24 hours, the hospital can order protective custody for Norris. Otherwise, he will be released, McAngus said.

Police recovered a .410-gauge shotgun, seven shotgun shells and four cartridges. No shots were fired and no one was injured, Kellye Norris said.

Lisa Jones, a teacher's aide at the International Montessori House of Children at 6817 Great Northern Blvd. about a block from David Norris' apartment, said when she arrived at the school at 7:25 a.m., police had blocked the entrance.

Police let her in the front door so she could make arrangements to have parents take their children to the school's other location on 30th Street, she said.

State could lose revenue

By SEAN S. PRICE
Daily Texan Staff

The state could lose as much as $100 million over the next two years because of cash flow problems created by constant interfund borrowing, state Treasurer Ann Richards said Monday in her monthly report on the general revenue fund.

"Texas has already lost $20,050,000 in potential interest income this year because money from other state funds was withdrawn to pay general revenue fund bills," Richards said. "If Texas does not find another way to solve its general revenue fund cash flow problems, the state could lose as much as $100 million in interest income during the next biennium."

Richards said her office has had to transfer money from other funds to the general revenue fund almost every day of this fiscal year.

In the past, Richards has said the cash flow problem could be eased by issuing cash management notes, a type of low-interest bond that will provide short-term money for the treasurer's office when shortages arise, Richards said several states and private businesses already use the notes.

Cash management notes have been criticized by some legislators as deficit spending, which is forbidden by the Texas Constitution.

However, Richards said the notes would not constitute deficit spending since they would be paid back before the end of the biennium.

Attorney General Jim Mattox has said that using the notes is constitutional.

Richards said if the state budget deficit stays at $1.3 billion as projected by Comptroller Bob Bullock, the state will be able to honor its debts.

However, Richards repeated her previous warning that there is no more than $1.3 billion available at any one time to pay the state's expenditures. She said if the deficit grows to $2 billion, the general revenue fund will run out by December.

Rapist sentenced to 30 years

By LISA BAKER
Daily Texan Staff

An Austin man accused of having a history of violence against women was sentenced Monday to 30 years in prison for the January rape of his neighbor.

John Odem, 27, pleaded guilty to aggravated sexual assault and received the 30-year sentence in a plea bargain, said Jim Doty, assistant Travis County district attorney.

Aggravated sexual assault is a first-degree felony and carries a punishment of five years' probation to life in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Odem had been arrested on burglary charges several times, but had not been convicted. He was under indictment on a burglary charge Monday, but prosecutors dismissed the burglary charge as part of the plea bargain, Doty said.

Odem entered a duplex Jan. 13 and raped the female occupant, according to police records. Odem carried a screwdriver from outside the woman's home and threatened to kill the woman during the rape, records state. He left the screwdriver behind when he left the victim's home.

'The deeper we dug, the more we turned up. We knew he had a history of violence in relationships with females.'

— Assistant District Attorney Carla Garcia

Assistant District Attorney Carla Garcia said prosecutors "had reason to believe he had been involved in assaulting both his ex-wife and ex-girlfriend."

"The deeper we dug, the more we turned up," Garcia said. "We knew he had a history of violence in relationships with females."

Austin police Sgt. Bruce Boardman, investigator with the department's sex crimes detail, said Odem confessed to the Jan. 13 rape when he was arrested on another burglary charge. When an Austin Police Department fingerprint technician realized Odem lived near the victim's duplex, Odem became a suspect in the rape, he said.

"His fingerprint was found at the point of entry — inside the point of entry" to the rape victim's home, Boardman said.

Prosecutors had a difficult time pinning down Odem's personality because "this guy was a pathological liar," Garcia said. "We had heard some outrageous stories of his, very few of which we could actually verify."

"We knew he had a bad reputation, but he was such a liar himself ... we don't really know," she said.

Boardman praised the plea bargain, saying while the 30-year prison sentence "is definitely not enough," it was satisfactory in light of Odem's previously clear conviction record and rules limiting the evidence presented to trial juries.

"I think based on his prior criminal history, we probably got as much as we can expect," Boardman said. "I'm pretty pleased with the 30 years — the DA's office did good."

Bennie House, Odem's attorney from Houston, could not be reached for comment.

Pesticide controls sustained

By SEAN S. PRICE
Daily Texan Staff

Texas agriculture officials said state District Judge Paul Davis' decision to uphold controversial pesticide regulations was a "complete and unqualified victory" for the recently established rules.

Davis, a district judge in Travis County, ruled that the Texas Department of Agriculture did not exceed its authority in January 1985 when it established and later amended pesticide regulations requiring farm operators to notify neighbors if they use pesticides.

The rules also require farmers to wait 24 hours between sprayings, before allowing workers to re-enter a treated field.

"The Agriculture Department has developed one of the most far-reaching and progressive pesticide programs in the country," said Assistant Attorney General Ken Cross, who defended the regulations for the department. "If the case is appealed, we'll have no problem defending it."

Rio Grande Valley vegetable grower Tommy Helle challenged the rule-making authority of the Agriculture Department, saying in last November's trial that the regulations were vague and exceeded the department's authority.

However, Davis ruled that if there is "sufficient evidence that long-term, chronic, low-level exposure by unprotected workers to pesticides presents an unreasonable risk of harm, the (TDA) may regulate pesticides in the way chosen in the rules."

Assistant Agriculture Commissioner Rick Lowerre said the regulations have been in force during the current growing season and there was no court order limiting TDA authority.

"Since implementation of the new regulations, Texas farmers and ranchers have had very few problems with, or complaints about, the standards," said TDA General Counsel Sam Biscoe, principal architect of the rules. "Indeed, most of them have indicated that the regulations have caused little or no concern, cost or inconvenience."

Wildcats bomb Seminoles

Arizona captures third NCAA baseball title

Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. — Mike Senne and Gar Millay hit two-run homers in the sixth inning and Gary Alexander pitched a seven-hitter as Arizona defeated Florida State 10-2 for the NCAA College World Series title Monday night.

It was the third national title for the fifth-ranked Wildcats, 49-19 on the year. It was the second trip to the finals for the top-ranked Seminoles, who ended 61-13. Florida State lost 2-1 to Southern Cal in a 15-inning championship game in 1970.

"I really wanted to shut them out, but I was trying too hard," Alexander said after he finished. "This feels so good."

Alexander, 8-2, lost his shutout bid in the ninth when Luis Alicea led off with a triple and Bien Figueroa singled him home. Ed Fulton singled Figueroa with the second run before Alexander wrapped up his third complete game of the year.

"It was just an old fashioned whipping," Florida State Coach Mike Martin said. "They did a great job. We threw our best at them and they beat us."

"We had our chances early and weren't able to do anything with them. But I'm really proud of our guys. This club won 61 ball games and we never gave up."

Senne, selected the tournament's most valuable player, had two hits and two runs batted in in the title match.

"Like Bill Murray said in Ghostbusters, 'We came, we saw, we kicked their butts,'" Senne said.

The Wildcats, ranked fifth, had 11 hits to go with Alexander's pitching.

"I didn't know if he had that much arm strength," Arizona Coach Jerry Kindall said. "I knew he had the heart. He's done it the last three weeks and he did it again."

Arizona started its title march by scoring unearned runs in the fourth and fifth for a 2-0 lead heading into the big sixth inning.

Florida State starter Mike Loynd, 20-3, gave up a leadoff double to Chip Hale in the sixth and left the game for Mike Lewis, who had won two and saved two for the Seminoles in the tournament.

Lewis gave up the first two-run homer to Senne, his 11th of the year and second of the CWS. Todd Trafton walked and one out later Millay hit his ninth homer of the year for a 6-0 lead.

The Wildcats added three more in the seventh on five hits, including RBI singles by Trafton and Millay and Tommy Hinzo's steal of home.

Among the championship game records set Monday, Arizona turned three double plays to equal the record set by Michigan in 1962 and tied by Southern Cal in 1972 and 1978.

Additionally, Lewis' appearance Monday night was his fifth of the CWS, tying the tournament record held by four others.

Sutton wins 299th as California blanks White Sox

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Don Sutton, backed by Doug DeCinces' three-run homer, pitched a two-hitter for his 299th career victory Monday night, leading the California Angels to a 3-0 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

Sutton, 4-5, turned in his first shutout and first complete game since last June 26 when he blanked the White Sox 10-0 while pitching for Oakland.

Sutton walked two and struck out eight as he snapped Chicago's four-game winning streak.

Tom Seaver, 2-4, was the loser although he allowed only three hits in the seven innings he worked.

Seaver got into trouble in the fourth inning when he hit Brian Downing with a pitch and Reggie Jackson followed with a single. Bobby Grich sacrificed before DeCinces hit his seventh homer of the season.

Sutton, gaining his 58th career shutout, held the White Sox hitless until the fifth when Bobby Bonilla led off with a single and went to third on a single by Scott Bradley. Sutton then fanned Tim Lincecum, Ozzie Guillen and Julio Cruz to keep his shutout intact.

■ Twins 3, Rangers 2 — In Minneapolis, Kent Hrbek scored from first base on Tom Brunansky's looping double in the 10th inning as the Twins beat Texas and ended the Rangers' seven-game winning streak.

Hrbek singled with two outs off Mitch Williams, 5-1, for his third hit of the game. Greg Harris relieved and Brunansky followed with a loop that center fielder George Wright backed up to field, and Hrbek scored ahead of second baseman Toby Harrah's relay. Keith Atherton, 3-3, pitched two perfect innings to gain the victory.

Gary Ward's two-run, eighth-inning triple following an error by Minnesota starter Frank Viola broke up a scoreless pitching duel between Viola and Rangers rookie right-hander Bobby Witt.

But Minnesota rallied to tie it 2-2 in its half of the eighth on Randy Bush's two-out RBI double that chased Witt and Hrbek's run-scoring single off Williams.

For seven innings, Viola and Witt engaged in a strikeout contest, with Viola getting eight of his 10 and Witt 11 of his career-high 12 in that span.

■ Indians 6, A's 5 — In Cleveland, Brett Butler singled home Andy Allanson from second with two out in the bottom of the ninth inning to give the Indians a victory over Oakland and extend the A's losing streak to six games.

Jose Rijo, 2-3, yielded a one-out single to Allanson and the Indians' rookie catcher stole second as Fran Mullins struck out. Butler then grounded the game-winning hit into center field. Indian reliever Scott Bailes raised his record to 7-4, with 2½ scoreless innings.

A's rookie starter Eric Plunk allowed Cleveland only one single until Brett Butler and Tony Bernazard each singled with one out in the sixth. After the second out, Andre Thornton walked to set up Mel Hall's two-run single. Dave Stewart relieved Plunk and Brook Jacoby greeted him with his eighth home run to give the Indians a 5-4 lead.

Oakland tied the game 5-5 in the seventh on an RBI double by Jose Canseco, extending his major league-leading RBI total to 56.

Cleveland's Joe Carter went 0-for-3 with a walk, snapping his 21 game hitting streak, the longest in the major leagues this season.

■ Blue Jays 5, Red Sox 1 — In Toronto, Dave Stieb and Tom Henke combined on a six-hitter and the Blue Jays got solo home runs from Lloyd Moseby and Jesse Barfield to beat Boston.

Stieb, 2-7, gave up six hits before needing relief help in the ninth from Henke, who gave up Boston's only run on a sacrifice fly by Dwight Evans.

The loss was the third consecutive and fourth in five games for the slumping Red Sox.

■ Yankees 9, Tigers 7 — In Detroit, Butch Wynegar's bases-loaded pinch single in the 11th inning drove in two runs and lifted New York past the Tigers.

With two outs in 11th, Dave Winfield drew a walk from Bill Scherrer, 0-1, the third Tiger pitcher. Mike Easler reached on an infield single and Don Pasqua walked to load the bases for Wynegar, who lined a 1-1 pitch in front of a diving Larry Herndon in left, scoring Winfield and Easler.

Ed Whitson, 5-2, pitched one inning for the victory. Bob Shirley recorded his first save after taking over in the 11th with none out and two runners on base.

The Yankees, with the help of two home runs and four RBI by Don Mattingly, had built a 7-4 lead going into the ninth. But the Tigers tied it with three runs off Yankee ace reliever Dave Righetti on a two-run single by Kirk Gibson and sacrifice fly by Lance Parrish.

Mattingly hit his ninth and 10th home runs of the season, while Ken Griffey and Ron Hassey each hit one — solo shots off Detroit starter Jack Morris, who has given up 20 home runs already this season. He gave up 21 in all of 1985. The first four Yankee hits in the game were homers.

■ Brewers 3, Orioles 2 — In Milwaukee, Robin Yount hit a sacrifice fly with one out in the ninth inning to boost the Brewers to a victory over Baltimore, breaking the Orioles' winning streak at four.

Rich Bordi relieved starter Storm

Davis, 5-5, with runners at second and third and one out to face Mike Felder. Felder was intentionally walked to load the bases, then Yount hit a sacrifice fly to right to drive in Earnest Riles, who had singled off Davis. Dan Plesac, 4-3, took the loss for the Brewers.

■ Astros 5, Padres 3 — In San Diego, Kevin Bass, Bill Doran, Glenn Davis and Craig Reynolds hit solo home runs to lead Houston past the Padres.

Bass hit his sixth homer of the season leading off the fourth inning. Doran opened the fifth with his third home run and Davis connected two outs later for his 12th, giving Houston a 4-0 lead.

The Astros' first three homers came off Eric Show, 3-4. Reynolds hit his third homer in the ninth against reliever Tim Stoddard.

■ Phillies 3, Mets 2 — In New York, Glenn Wilson singled home Mike Schmidt from second base with one out in the 10th inning, giving Philadelphia a victory over the Mets.

The loss snapped New York's four-game winning streak. It also marked the first time in 31 games this season that the Mets lost a game in which they led after seven innings.

Don Carman, 3-0, pitched 1½ innings for the victory and Steve Bedrosian got the final two outs for his eighth save.

■ Pirates 6, Cubs 5 — In Pittsburgh, pinch-hitter Jim Morrison's one-out double off Chicago relief ace Lee Smith scored R.J. Reynolds with the winning run in the 11th inning as the Pirates edged Chicago.

Cubs reliever Jay Baller had retired 10 consecutive batters, including the first five on strikeouts, until Reynolds lined a leadoff double in the 11th. After Baller intentionally walked Tony Pena, Smith retired Bill Almon on a short fly ball.

Orioles' Floyd Rayford reaches for errant throw in Brewers' 3-2 victory.

Celtics restore championship tradition

Associated Press

BOSTON — Three fans cloaked in white bed sheets drifted behind the Houston Rockets' bench before the game. The ghosts of the Boston Celtics' glorious tradition are very real.

The eerie welcome for the intruders who dared threaten that tradition preceded a 114-97 NBA title-clinching victory Sunday that Boston dominated from the opening tap to the final buzzer.

"It's a case of the standards being set high here for so long," Celtics' guard Jerry Sichting said. "Everyone who wears the uniform wants to play his best to live up to these standards."

They were set by three NBA greats — Bob Cousy, Bill Russell and John Havlicek — and the teams they played on. Those same standards are being met and enhanced by Larry Bird and his teammates, who will be honored at a downtown parade and City Hall rally Tuesday.

From Cousy, who was on the first Celtics' championship team in 1957, through Bird, the leader of the team that won Boston's 16th title Sunday, the standards of excellence rarely wavered.

When they defeated the Rockets 114-97 to capture the best-of-seven series, 4-2.

Rockets star Akeem Olajuwon, who had predicted victory in Houston, left the fans with one more forecast.

"We proved this year that we belong, and next year we're going to do it," Olajuwon said. "And we are still unbeatable."

Hundreds of fans jammed the airport terminal as the Rockets departed. They shouted Rocket cheers and waved banners of encouragement.

The Boston Celtics, heavy favorites from the start of the title series, won their 16th NBA title Sunday

Sichting, who was obtained before the season from the Indiana Pacers, found out that "the Celtics have such a winning history that if you finish as runner-up, you've had a lousy year."

"The Celtics measure their success by winning the championship," he said. "Other teams measure their success by getting into the playoffs."

The club's tradition has been marked by a sense of purpose and determination. Both assets helped the Celtics respond to an embarrassing 111-96 loss in last Thursday night's fifth game that got them mad at themselves.

"Everyone knows what we had to do," Bird said. "We had a great opportunity to win it. Whenever you have two games to win it, you've got a good chance. We knew the fans would carry us through. They did. The players deserve a lot of credit, too."

His teammates gave most of the credit to Bird, who won his second playoff Most Valuable Player Award in three years just 11 days after winning his third consecutive regular-season MVP Award.

"Everything that can be said about Larry has been said," Boston guard Dennis Johnson said.

"The best thing I've heard is what (club President) Red (Auerbach) said, which is that the difference between him and everyone else is that he comes to win every night. He is undoubtedly, in my mind at least, the best basketball player playing the game today."

"I love it," Houston Coach Bill Fitch, who coached Boston and Bird for four seasons, said of Bird's attitude. "A lot of guys can learn from him. It's like the only theory on how to train a dumb dog. You make him watch a smart dog."

"He beats a team in so many ways," Sichting said, "a steal, a block, a rebound, a basket, and he knows how to get the fans into the game."

The vocal fans, another part of the Celtics' tradition, were involved even before Sunday's game started, and they cavorted on the court, atop the backboard and in nearby streets after it ended.

The Celtics were 47-1 in Boston Garden this season.

"Every time we go out on this floor we expect to win for these fans," Johnson said. "I think they had quite a bit to do with what happened out there."

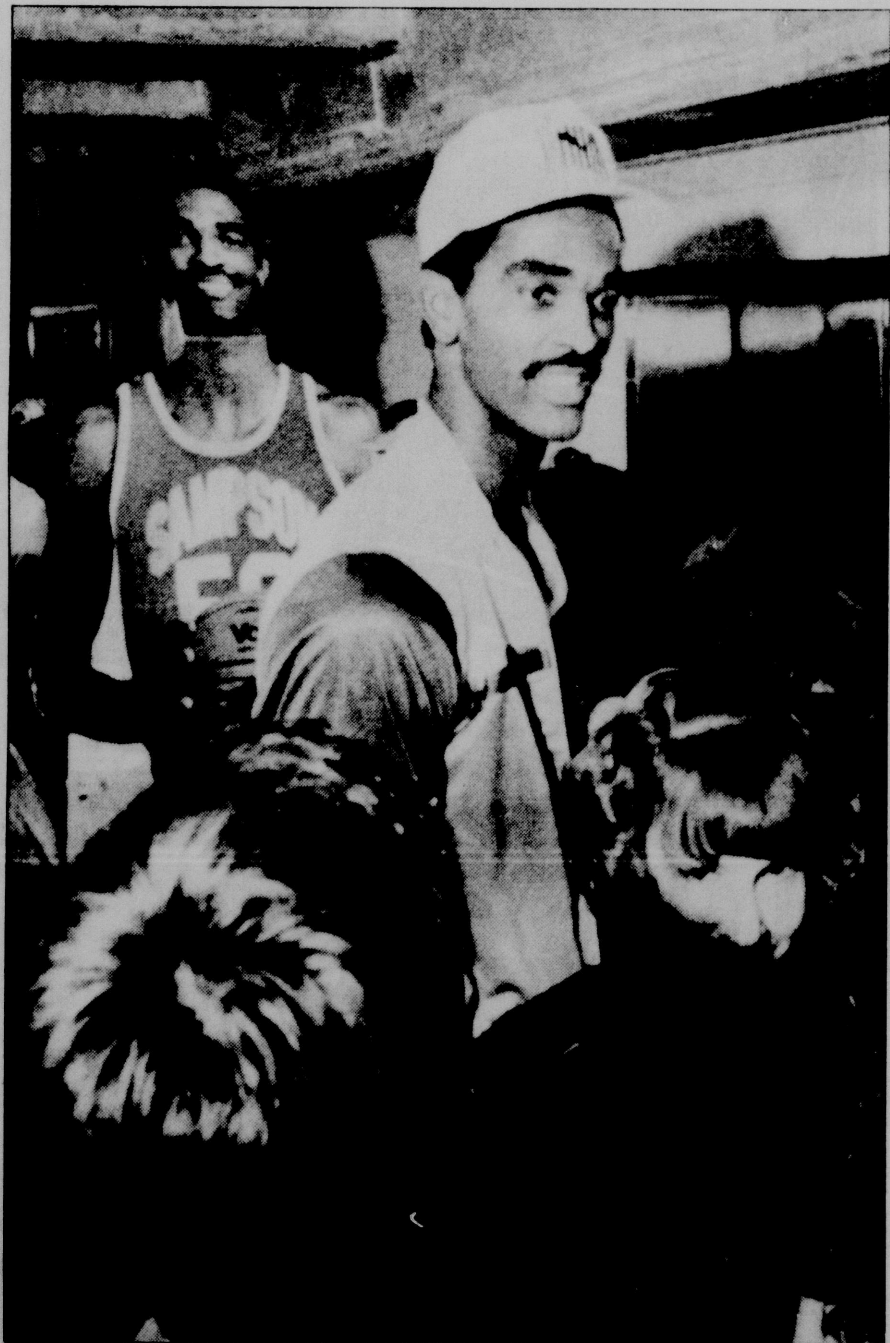

got it," Sampson said.

Sampson said the brawl in the fifth game had nothing to do with the Rockets' sluggish showing Sunday.

"You (media) built up the fight, we didn't," Sampson said. "It didn't have anything to do with what happened."

Sampson was the object of boos at Boston Garden virtually everytime he touched the ball.

"We just didn't play our game the way we had to," Sampson said.

Ormsby listed in stable condition

INDIANAPOLIS — The condition of North Carolina State distance runner Kathy Ormsby, permanently paralyzed from injuries she sustained after jumping from a bridge, was upgraded to stable from serious Monday, a spokeswoman for Wishard Memorial Hospital said.

Spokeswoman Karen Wilczewski also said that Ormsby was expected to be transferred at mid-week from Wishard to Duke Medical Center in Durham, N.C.

Her father, Dale Ormsby, said he wanted his daughter transferred so she could be closer to home.

The 21-year-old pre-med student from Rockingham, N.C., suffered multiple spinal fractures, a punctured lung and a broken rib when she jumped from a bridge last Wednesday night, minutes after dropping out with 8½ miles remaining in the women's 10,000-meter race at the NCAA Track and Field Championships.

Astros' Thon put on disabled list

HOUSTON — The Houston Astros placed hard-luck shortstop Dickie Thon on the 15-day disabled list Monday after the former all-star shortstop complained of blurred vision.

Thon returned from Los Angeles and was to be examined Monday by Dr. Dan Jones but Astros General Manager Dick Wagner said he had not received a doctor's report.

Thon, who missed all but five games of the 1984 season after being struck in the eye by a pitch from New York Mets pitcher Mike Torrez. He came back last season and hit .251 in 84 games for the Astros.

Feeney successor may be Giamatti

NEW YORK — Baseball's National League has called a news conference Tuesday, apparently to name retiring Yale President A. Bartlett Giamatti as its president, succeeding Charles "Chub" Feeney, who is retiring after 17 years in the post.

A three-member selection committee was to recommend Giamatti at a Monday meeting of NL owners, according to The New York Times. A National League spokeswoman had no comment on whether any session was held, but said a news conference has been scheduled for 10 a.m. CDT Tuesday.

Giamatti was considered for the baseball commissioner's job two years ago before Peter Ueberroth was named.

Jury selected for Williams' retrial

NEW ORLEANS — A jury of five women and one man was selected Monday for the second trial of former Tulane basketball star John "Hot Rod" Williams on accusations he fixed a pair of basketball games last year.

The 6-foot-10 Williams is accused of shaving points in two Tulane games in a gambling scheme during the 1984-85 season. His first trial last summer was stopped abruptly amid accusations that the district attorney's office misbehaved.

Sidekicks fold without new buyer

DALLAS — The Dallas Sidekicks folded Monday when owner Donald Carter, facing $5 million in losses over the club's first two seasons, couldn't find a suitable buyer for the Major Indoor Soccer League franchise.

Carter, who also owns the Dallas Mavericks of the National Basketball Association, requested a $2.5 million line of credit that a group of potential investors couldn't meet, club officials said.

Auditor Ron Tharp cited financial losses as the reason for the team's demise.

The AM skip: from prayer cloths to 'Car Wash'

Editor's Note: This is the second in a series of weekly articles about the wonders of AM radio.

By RON MARKS
Daily Texan Staff

There's a whole bunch of negative things you can say about AM radio signals: the sound quality is limited by a narrow frequency response, and static abounds. But there's just no getting around one thing: AM radio knows how to travel.

In radio, DX stands for distance. And DXers are enthusiasts who listen to the AM band and record the faraway stations they pick up into little log books. But you don't have to be that zealous to enjoy the pleasures of listening to faraway signals; log books are purely optional, and all you really need to have for DXing is an AM radio.

DXers depend on AM because skip — the magnetospheric phenomenon that allows FM and TV signals to travel great distances—exists only when conditions are favorable. DXing must also be done after sundown, when lower-powered interfering stations have left the air.

Central Texas is a great place for DXing. The AM band here is a rich static soup of all kinds of broadcasting from all kinds of places, and the strongest signals aren't always from the local stations. As a matter of fact, Austin has only five licensed AM stations: KLBJ (590 KHz), KIXL (970 KHz), KVET (1300 KHz), KNOW (1490 KHz), and KTXZ (1560 KHz). KELG (1440 KHz) from Elgin, KTAE (1260 KHz) from Taylor and KGTN (1530 KHz) from Georgetown round out the local AM stations.

But the gigantic presence of San Antonio, a measly 75 miles to the southwest, is strongly felt on the AM airwaves of Austin. The strongest signal in Austin belongs to San Antonio's behemoth news-talk station WOAI (1200 KHz). WOAI broadcasts on a clear channel, a frequency to which no other station is assigned within at least a 500-mile radius. WOAI also broadcasts at the U.S. power limit of 50,000 watts. Which means that Austin's not the only place where WOAI comes in more clearly than the locals. You can actually pick up WOAI's signal all through the South and Midwest.

The other San Antonio DXer classic is KTSA (550 KHz), also known as the Powerhouse of South Texas. In a time in which top-40 stations have abandoned the staticky AM dial for the high-fidelity FM dial, KTSA is something of an anachronism. Their playlist includes the current Top 10, but tempers doses of George Michael with liberal helpings of Rubberband Man by the Spinners, anything by KC & the Sunshine Band, and the entire sound track from Car Wash, creating an incredible illusion that it's always 1976.

But two stations from Louisiana — KWKH out of Shreveport and WWL from New Orleans — have developed the 50,000-watt, clear-channel station into a science. Both stations cater specifically to the otherwise untapped market of truckers on the interstates of the South. They take advantage of their enormous DX power to sell advertising to truck stops along the interstates from Dallas to Atlanta to Fredericksburg, Va.

Every night, these low-tech superstations broadcast trucker-oriented country music shows supported by those ads. KWKH, which calls itself "the Radio Ranch," hosts the Interstate Truckers' Show, a mixture of contemporary country music and downhome comedy tracks from Jerry Clower and Justin Wilson. WWL's Road Gang show concentrates mostly on classic tunes like In the Jailhouse Now from the days when country music was called hillbilly music. Interspersed between the Carter Family and Tex Ritter songs are weather forecasts for an improbably broad area of the country. A typical Road Gang weather report might cover New Orleans, Boise, Fargo, New York City and Miami in 60 seconds.

The true giants of DXing, though, come from Mexico, where clear channels abound and the government places no limiting restrictions on transmitter power. In the states, the most legendary of these stations is known simply as The X. This Mexican powerhouse beams 300,000 watts from a tower in Ciudad Acuna all the way to Canada, giving The X a signal that can be heard almost as clearly in Denver as in Austin. Most Americans know The X for Wolfman Jack's rock 'n' roll broadcasts of the '50s or the preachers who have hawked prayer cloths and goat-gland extracts for the past 20-odd years. The X made news recently when its Del Rio-based management decided to jettison its English programs in favor of a Mexican music format.

That move will undoubtedly place them in direct competition with XHE, "El Ranchero de Monterrey," which plays the finest in norteno and conjunto music 24 hours a day. With a signal at least four times stronger than the strongest U.S. stations, XHE can be found at right around 1000 KHz. The music on XHE comes mostly from the roster of DLV Records, which operates the station and releases discs by such norteno heavyweights as Los Relampagos and Los Bravos del Norte de Ramon Ayala. If you can understand Spanish, you'll appreciate the reverb-heavy commercials for American wig manufacturers that cut in between the cumbias and corridas. If you can't speak Spanish, don't worry; the button accordion is a universal language.

And to wax romantic, that's what DXing is all about. There's a great deal to be learned about other cultures from a scan of the AM dial late at night — whether they come from Monterrey or Chicago or Columbus, Ohio. The voices of an entire continent are as close as your jam box or clock radio.

'Invaders From Mars' campy thriller

By KENNETH KORMAN
Daily Texan Staff

Invaders From Mars is director Tobe Hooper's tribute to the Saturday matinees of everyone's childhood. Complete with gross rubber monsters, vicious or inept adults, and a sub-teen hero, Invaders From Mars recalls the era of low-budget, inadvertently funny film making.

The first few scenes of this film introduce us to Mr. and Mrs. Gardner (Timothy Bottoms and Laraine Newman), a nice suburban couple with a young son named David (Hunter Carson). After David sees a gigantic UFO land on the other side of a hill behind their house, their orderly world starts to fall apart.

When David comes down to breakfast the next morning, not only does Dad have a mysterious hole in the back of his neck and a zombie-like demeanor, he can no longer observe the simple etiquette of his lifestyle. He dumps an entire box of artificial sweetener in his coffee, gulps it down, and chews on the Nutrasweet™ remaining in the bottom of his cup.

Mom doesn't fare much better: after a late evening walk over the hill with dad, she casually sends David off to school while munching raw hamburger. Unfortunately, eating disorders are not the Gardners' only problem: they want to take David over the hill too.

When the accepted standards of suburban behavior have gone askew, it is unquestionably time for action. This task is left to David, who spends the rest of the film trying to convince a world of disbelieving adults that Martians have invaded Earth and are trying to take control of the human race.

Invaders From Mars succeeds as both a comedy and an adventure due to a well-chosen and devoted cast. Timothy Bottoms obviously takes great pleasure here in the most ridiculous role of his career. Louise Fletcher plays the schoolteacher of every third-grader's nightmare, and Bud Cort is the ultimate scientist nerd. They both approach their roles with an unusual lack of reserve, resulting in a movie that's a lot funnier than its script.

Even so, Invaders From Mars' greatest drawback is an underemphasis on that humor. The few big laughs in this movie only leave the audience wanting more. The director unnecessarily allots more screen-time to basic plot development than to exploiting a unique opportunity for comedy and satire.

More than anything, Invaders From Mars reminds one the immortal Batman television series of the late '60s. Even the extras appear to have been instructed to overplay their roles with as much fervor as humanly possible. This is a decidedly campy film, but without the ugly self-indulgence of most films that can be described with that word.

Invaders From Mars is a remake of a classic '50s movie, and it owes an obvious debt not only to the original, but to a hundred other films of the walking-zombie genre. This is, however, the film's greatest attribute. A blatant disregard for the standards of modern "realistic" filmmaking propels this movie forward, making Invaders From Mars a surprising pleasure. In light of this summer's bleak crop of new film releases, that is a valuable thing indeed.

Invaders From Mars, directed by Tobe Hooper, starring Hunter Carson (the kid from Paris, Texas), Laraine Newman, Timothy Bottoms, Karen Black (Carson's mom), Louise Fletcher, and a cast of big slimy monsters. The new, thin Belinda Carlisle: married, mainstream and proud of it.

Ex-Go-Go finds self

By KEVIN LEWIS
Daily Texan Staff

It's no wonder that vocalist Belinda Carlisle is happy.

Her former band, the Go-Go's, broke up a year ago, climaxing a period of great difficulty for her. But since then, she has turned things around. Carlisle recently married Morgan Mason, son of actor James Mason. She's also begun a solo career, and things are going well. To many listeners, her current music, and even her lifestyle, seem too mainstream to be interesting. But Carlisle seems content. Her life is nice. She sees her present routine as a welcome relief from a life that had been out of balance.

For Carlisle, the day the Go-Go's broke up was a turning point. After fronting the group for eight years and three albums, on May 10, 1985, she found herself on her own. In a recent interview, she described the main reason for the breakup as "differences of musical opinion." For her and guitarist/keyboardist Charlotte Caffey, the band just wasn't exciting anymore.

There was friction with other group members over whether the band should stay together. "It was like a relationship; there's always one side who thinks it's worth saving, that you can keep it going," she said. She and Caffey, though, felt that the band was "a hopeless case ... far beyond repair."

At the time of the breakup, Carlisle was admittedly not in good mental or physical condition. Under the bubbly, clean image of the Go-Go's, she managed to conceal a few vices. "I had some problems that I had to deal with," she said cautiously. "I was looking bad and feeling bad." She feels her environment was music

'Being in rock and roll gives you a justification for getting involved in drugs and alcohol.'

— Belinda Carlisle

mainly to blame.

"Being in rock and roll gives you a justification for getting involved in drugs and alcohol. If a person is really strong, he can resist getting involved, but not a lot of people are strong," she said. Carlisle felt uncomfortable in surroundings where everyone seems to have an opinion but no one is necessarily telling the truth. "It's not the real world," she concluded.

One gets the distinct impression that Carlisle needs to control her world. She seems to want definite boundaries for her life, beyond which she has little concern. On her new album, entitled Belinda, she co-wrote only one of the songs. "I don't really have an interest in songwriting," she explains. She does not feel compelled to sing songs with socially relevant or political lyrics.

While she was with the Go Go's she had a sort of stability, but she was uncomfortable because she was not in control. "I don't ever want to have to grind it out like I did when I was with the Go Go's," she said.

Belinda Carlisle wants simply to take care of herself, and to sing. "The big reason for doing this solo album is to prove that I could get myself together ... I wanted to do something that I loved."

Postmodern pioneer to design gallery wing

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Robert Venturi, who tossed aside the simple faces of modern architecture to show off buildings with colored brick patterns and occasional large flowers, is using his love for richness in designing the new extension to London's National Gallery.

The $35 million structure is to be built in historic Trafalgar Square. It is a project that's been tried three times before, each one falling to money problems or design disputes.

The 60-year-old Venturi loves Italian art and is a fan of English and Italian architecture. The assignment gives him the best of both worlds. However, he will not reveal the design before it is finished this fall. The project is expected to be completed in 1990.

"One of the thrills of working in the National Gallery is you're designing the background of possibly the greatest collection of Italian art, Italian paintings, outside Italy," he said in an interview.

The last proposed design included a glass, stepped tower in front that could be rented as office space. It was tossed after Prince Charles described it as "a monstrous carbuncle on the face of a well-loved friend."

In selecting Venturi, whose Philadelphia firm of Venturi, Rauch and art

Scott Brown was chosen over four British and two American companies, the state art gallery's trustees hired someone with the same disdain as the prince for the simple look of modern architecture.

They also chose a man who works seven days a week as senior partner with John Rauch and Denise Scott Brown, Venturi's wife.

The extension will incorporate elements that both contrast with, and relate to, the old building. "We don't want to upstage the great architecture that is in it," Venturi said in a conference room at the firm's office, a three-story, 19th-century former warehouse.

Widely described as a pioneer in postmodern architecture, Venturi is not afraid of color, patterns, new or old ideas for his designs as long as they're appropriate to the task at hand. Plain things seem to give him trouble.

"The main approach of mine, of our firm, is that we have emphasized an architecture which promotes richness over simplicity. We have reacted against modern architecture, which liked stark simplicity."

"It also is an architecture that accommodates a particular site. And, it's an architecture that uses symbolism," said Venturi, who once proposed a 90-foot model of a red apple for Times Square in New York.

"I think we're now going back to an attitude where we want to rely on convention — a historical past — and evolve out of it."

The firm has designed college buildings, theaters, stores — including a discount store in green with big red and white flowers — homes and parks. They did Washington's Western Plaza, a marble and granite map of the capital city as foreseen by its founder, Pierre L'Enfant. The plaza anchors the White House end of Pennsylvania Avenue between the executive mansion and the Capitol.

For another project, the National Park Service wanted a monument to Benjamin Franklin on the site of the revolutionary statesman's Philadelphia home, which was torn down decades before for a street.

Without enough documentation to rebuild the home, Venturi said he and Scott Brown came up with the solution after considering the constraints: They proposed "ghost" structures — white metal beams in the outline of the house and Franklin's neighboring print shop, to give an idea of their size had they survived.

Windows into the brick floor of the park near Independence Hall provide a glimpse of the home's foundation beneath the ghost structures, which also shadow excerpts of letters from Franklin to his wife about the house.

"I always did want to be an architect," said Venturi, who graduated from Princeton University. He spent two years as a fellow at the American Academy in Rome after working for other architects, including Eero Saarinen. He then opened his own office in Philadelphia, at the same time teaching at the University of Pennsylvania.

Venturi wrote Complexity and Contradiction in Architecture in 1966, and Learning From Las Vegas in 1972, which detailed a study he and students from Yale University made of the signs along the Las Vegas strip.

"Naturally, we were punished by the architecture establishment for being so vulgar," Venturi said, smiling at the thought. "But we used it as a vehicle to learn about symbolism."

Where modern architecture had come to dislike symbols, Venturi finds nothing wrong with using them. A church, he said, should have more than a functional design. It should look like a church.

"We were even saying that a gothic cathedral was like a billboard. You would read it," he said.

Consumerists want new name for beef grade

WASHINGTON — A consumer group, with support from health organizations and the meat industry, asked the government Monday to rename the "good" grade of beef as "select" and launch a campaign to sell Americans on eating leaner meat.

Consumers now shy away from beef graded "good" because the name carries a connotation of inferior quality, said Ellen Haas, director of Public Voice for Food and Health Policy. In fact, "good" beef is leaner and thus more healthful than either "choice" or "prime," and should be promoted as such, she told a news conference.

Haas said she had received a favorable initial response from Agriculture Secretary Richard Lyng, although opposition was expected from some groups. Beef packers like highly fattened animals because a higher percentage of each carcass is marketable. And corn growers would likely resist any move that would weaken the market for feed grains.

Italian government acts to cut zeroes off lira

ROME — With a plateful of pasta costing a fistful of lire, the Italian government is getting ready to cut a few zeroes off its currency.

The Cabinet last week approved draft legislation to introduce the "lira nuova," or new lira. One new lira would be worth 1,000 of today's lire.

Thus a dollar that now buys about 1,500 lire would be worth 1.5 new lire.

The action would not reduce the value of the Italian currency. It is aimed at simplifying transactions in a country where tourists are baffled by restaurant bills in thousands of lire, where rents are in the millions and the public debt has reached an eye-opening 95 billion lire.

The change is also intended to give a psychological boost in Italy's battle to bring down inflation that raged as high as 20 percent five years ago but is now running around 6 percent.

Norwegian whaling could result in U.S. ban

WASHINGTON — Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, claiming that Norway is defying an international prohibition against killing whales, Monday announced steps that could lead to a ban on Norwegian fish products.

Norway in 1985 exported some $1 billion in fish products, including $143 million to the United States, mostly salmon, sardines and shrimp, according to Commerce Department figures.

Reagan administration officials said the steps announced by Baldrige represented an environmental protest against Norwegian harvesting of whales in the North Atlantic rather than a trade dispute.

Baldrige sent to President Reagan a "certification" that Norway, in catching minke whales, was undermining efforts by the International Whaling Commission (IWC) to protect the mammals.

Great Wall card — don't leave China without it

PEKING — First came the gold card, then the platinum card and now those who want exclusive plastic can apply for a Great Wall credit card.

But they'll have to go to China to get it.

The Bank of China announced last week that it will issue Great Wall Cards to Chinese and foreign businesses as well as individuals. The cards, issued by the Peking branch of the bank, will be honored at the Diaoyutai state guesthouse and 35 other businesses, according to Chinese press reports.

Charges on the card will represent foreign exchange certificates, which can be used to purchase imported items. The cards will not be available to most Chinese since they do not have access to the certificates.

MARKET REPORT

NEW YORK — The stock market dropped sharply Monday, yielding to selling that left the Dow Jones industrial average with its largest single-day point loss ever.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 45.75 to 1,840.15, exceeding the previous record decline of 41.91 set April 30.

In percentage terms, the 2.43 percent drop came nowhere close to some past debacles. On Oct. 28, 1929, the average fell 12.9 percent in the Great Crash of that year.

Nevertheless, the losses were pervasive as the market found willing sellers but few enthusiastic buyers. Volume on the New York Stock Exchange came to 123.33 million shares, against 110.91 million Friday.

Analysts said there was nothing special in the news to trigger selling of stocks.

Fees for checking services increasing

By LESLIE RITCHIE
Daily Texan Staff

Banking institutions are charging higher or new service fees as a result of deregulation, forcing students to shop more carefully for savings and checking services, banking industry experts report.

"The consumer will now have to pay the market rate for many services which banks had been offering at a loss under federal regulation," said Jim Lederer, vice president of the Texas Bankers Association.

Students can no longer simply walk down the street, pick a bank and expect to get a good deal, said Eric Sandberg, senior vice president of the Savings and Loan League, a trade organization of state savings and loan associations.

"Each student has to sit down and decide for himself who pays what interest, who charges what and what is convenient for me," Sandberg said.

Lederer said all banks and savings and loan associations must, by law, supply all fee information to the prospective customers. Most provide a schedule of fees brochure.

Sandberg said savings and loans differ from banks by paying interest on all accounts, including checking accounts.

Checking accounts at banks generally do not pay interest. However, banks do offer NOW — negotiable order of withdrawal — accounts that do pay interest.

Sandberg said financial institutions are moving in the same direction after deregulation. In the past, savings and loans concentrated on community and personal banking, while banks paid greater attention toward businesses.

Now, banks are lending more to consumers and are catering to smaller consumer banking, while savings and loans now make commercial loans.

Many students are not as interested in interest rates on checking accounts as they are in the service charges accessed for the number of checks written each month and the use of automatic teller machines.

If the checking account is fairly inactive, a bank may be cheaper than a savings and loan. But if a student expects to write a lot of checks and to use an ATM machine often, a savings and loan association makes it easier to know exactly what charges to expect each month.

United Bank does offer a "student" checking account, requiring no minimum balance, for $6 per month and 25 cents per check after the first five checks. Interfirst Bank has a "2/20" account that also requires no minimum balance for $2 per month and 20 cents per check.

All institutions have free checking if a specified minimum balance is maintained. If students can maintain this minimum, it is by far the cheapest route. If not, savings and loans usually offer interest on their checking accounts with a much lower minimum balance for free services than any bank's equivalent NOW account.

As another alternative students may want to check with relatives who could be eligible to join a credit union. To open an account at the University Federal Credit Union one must be a graduate student, faculty member or relative of a member.

Capsules still marketed, despite incidents

By BYONG Y. KWON
Daily Texan Staff

Despite several capsule tampering incidents — including one in Austin — many companies are not following Johnson & Johnson's lead and are continuing to offer capsules on the over-the-counter market.

Up to 1985, Americans bought 10 billion capsules per year on the over-the-counter drug market. The withdrawal of Tylenol capsules, soon after the death of a woman in Westchester, New York, in February, represented a third of that market and cost Johnson & Johnson $150 million.

"They (Johnson & Johnson) had a unique situation," said Mary Simons, assistant director of public affairs for the Proprietary Association, the national association of over-the-counter drug manufacturers. Since Tylenol specifically was used to kill people, Johnson & Johnson had to abandon the capsule because their brand name was tarnished, she said.

Other capsule products have been contaminated. A UT chemistry senior was found dead May 22. An autopsy indicated he had been poisoned by cyanide-laced Anacin capsules.

Austin police consider suicide a strong possibility in the case.

"Even if capsules were removed from the market, tampering would still exist," Simons said. "Capsules are only one form of consumer product that can be tampered with. Many consumers have a strong preference for capsules and we (the drug industry) believe that consumers should continue to have the choice between capsules and (other forms of medication)."

Some over-the-counter medicines are still available in capsule form.

The Proprietary Association's views on capsules are also shared by the Food and Drug Administration. "The position of the FDA is that the capsule is still a viable and useful (product) and we know of no reason why it shouldn't be on the market," said Don Heaton, regional director of the FDA.

"I don't think (the FDA) will ever ban the capsule. We're not even contemplating that possibility," Heaton said. "It's not practical to consider banning things (that can be poisoned) by crazy people. You can't legislate crazy people."

Regardless of arguments made by proponents of capsules, there is no overwhelming pharmacological need for capsules on the over-the-counter drug market, most industry experts agreed.

In spite of industry efforts to prevent capsule tampering, Wall Street analysts have written off capsules. "The capsule is doomed," said David Bartash, first vice president of Dean, Witter, Reynolds, Inc. "The issue of safety has been established in the consumer's mind."

"Financially, over-the-counter capsules play a minor role in industry profits. They make most of their money on prescription drugs. Companies are fighting a losing battle trying to keep the capsule alive."
