HOOSIER TEAM GOES THROUGH LIGHT PRACTICE

Coach Harper Pleased at Being in Austin Again—Notre Dame Men Being Royally Entertained While in Austin.

"I'm glad to be back again in Austin," said Coach Harper of the Notre Dame football team yesterday morning. "The town and your University certainly won for themselves a warm spot in my heart when I was here two years ago, and it's a great pleasure to be with you again."

The coach, with twenty-three husky football players, arrived in Austin yesterday morning on the 4:10 I. & G. N. The squad left their Pullman at 8 o'clock, crawled into waiting automobiles and went directly to St. Edward's College, where they will make their headquarters while in Austin.

After seeing that his men were comfortably located, Mr. Harper returned to town and called on Mr. Bellmont and Trainer Disch. After casually inspecting the Campus and Clark Field, he returned to St. Edward's about noon.

In the afternoon the Notre Dame squad went through a rather strenuous two-hour signal practice, in an effort to work the stiffness, caused by the long trip from Chicago to Austin, out of their muscles.

Last night they were the guests of the Newman Club at a reception given at the club's rooms. This morning the team will be entertained by the girls at St. Mary's.

Although Mr. Harper was optimistic, he would make no prophecy concerning the outcome of Thursday's game.

"We are expecting a tough game," he said, "but my men are in prime condition. We will be somewhat handicapped by the heat, of course. Snow fell during our last Saturday's game with Creighton University, and such extremes of weather are hard on the men, but we expect to pull through all right."

The Notre Dame eleven will have their final signal practice this afternoon before they go into the big game tomorrow.

LARGE CROWD SEES AEROPLANES LAND

Many Students Watched Fliers Alight on Way to San Antonio—Squadron Was Scattered.

Fully 1500 people, including many students, witnessed the arrival of two of the six United States army aeroplanes en route from Fort Sill, Okla., to San Antonio, at which place a large aviation station will be established by the Government.

The two machines which arrived shortly before noon yesterday were roundly cheered by the City Commission, numerous students and hundreds of others.

The aero squadron was scattered, and four planes were driven westward by a strong east wind and were unable to reach Austin on schedule time.

About 11:30 the first of the machines was sighted by Chief Electrician Stephen K. Izorek, as he stood on the eighty-acre plot of ground to the north of the State Insane Asylum which has been selected as the landing place of the squadron.

Lieutenants Bowen and Milling were the aviators who were successful against the strong east wind and who arrived on the appointed time. Of the four remaining fliers, three came in early in the afternoon and the other later.

500 DELEGATES EXPECTED HERE FOR CONFERENCE

Y. M. C. A. Planning to Care for Large Body of Representatives During "Older Boys" Conference This Week.

Active preparations are now being made by the University Y. M. C. A. to take care of the 600 delegates who are expected to attend the Y. M. C. A. "Older Boys" conference, which convenes here Friday afternoon. Men are now working to secure places for the delegates to stay while in the city. The boys will be housed, fed, and entertained as long as the session lasts, which will be until Sunday evening.

Word has been received from several cities as to the number of delegates that are coming. From Bay City will come the Bay City High School Band, composed of fifteen members and other representatives, and the whole delegation will be headed by W. B. Bates, a graduate of last year's Law class and president of the Law Department for the term of 1914-15. From Dallas will come a special car of thirty students from that city, together with other boys from the surrounding towns. They will bring with them their High School Quartette. A like number of delegates will come from Houston, San Antonio and other larger cities. There will be 110 delegates from Williamson County.

This is the fourth annual conference of the "Older Boys," and it is expected to be the most successful that has ever been held. Heretofore they have been held only as a side issue. Last year, however, Mr. J. L. Hunter was put in charge of the "Older Boys" work, and he says that he expects to reach 50,000 boys by means of these conferences and the work he does over the State, and to instill into them clean athletics, clean language and clean spirit.

This "Older Boys" conference will also be of some value to the University, because it will bring down here some 600 boys from 15 to 20 years of age, who are really college prospects, and will give them a chance to see the University. Some noted speakers will talk during the conference. Among them is James A. Whitmore of New York, one of the greatest speakers for boys in the United States.

MRS. KIRBY HIGHLY PLEASSED WITH GIRLS' CONDUCT AT GAME

Enthusiasm at A. & M. Was Dignified—Plan of Reserving Seats for Girls Also Meets With Approval.

In speaking of the girls' conduct at the game last Friday, Mrs. Helen Marr Kirby said:

"I can not too highly commend the beautiful enthusiasm, combined with the womanly dignity which the University co-eds displayed on that occasion. Their buoyant courage in defeat was an inspiration to the team."

In addition, she expressed her approval of the plan which has been carried out recently of reserving a section of the grandstand specially for the girls. In this way, not only do they give encouragement to the team by their numbers, she pointed out, but they make it possible for a large number of men to be added to the rooters' section.

LITTLEFIELD SICK.

Slight Cold Will Not Keep Him Out of Game Tomorrow.

Clyde Littlefield was confined to his room yesterday on account of a cold. It was not learned by the coaches whether his illness was of a serious nature or not, but it is not thought probable that he will be kept out of the game tomorrow on this account.

ENGINEERS TO HOLD ANNUAL EXHIBIT TODAY

Each Department to Have Special Display Showing Work Done by Students and Progress of Modern Science.

There is to be no reception after the "open house" at the Engineering Department today. The Engineering Building is to be opened to visitors from 2:30 until 5 in the afternoon. The rooms will not be decorated by the classes as in previous years, but the different departments will give exhibits.

Students in Civil Engineering are to show tests on Portland cement. They will make briquettes and test their strength by breaking them. In this section there will also be a 40,000-pound testing machine for steel which has recently been installed. Drawings for structural work and bridge designing will also be on display.

The Department of Architecture's exhibit will be for the most part the one that was shown at the State Fair, consisting of drawings showing design, water-color sketches, pen and ink sketches, free-hand drawings and drawings for construction.

The Electrical Engineering students are to have the most spectacular display. All of the machinery in the laboratories will be running, showing a mercury arc rectifier, to change the current from alternating to direct; a self-reversing motor, and a 50,000-volt transformer puncturing mica. All the modern electrical appliances for the home will be shown in operation here also. The Juniors of this department are to give a startling exhibition of a high tension coil in action. The sparks in the darkness are a good imitation of lightning.

Sophomores and Freshmen will have examples of mechanical and machine drawings on display.

The Bureau of Economic Geology, which is also to have a section of the building, will show specimens of building material available in Texas, particularly gravel and concrete.

This is the fifteenth annual "open house" given by the Engineering Department. It is an opportunity for all the students in the University to keep abreast with the progress of science.

FIVE COUNTRIES REPRESENTED BY VARSITY STUDENTS

From information secured from the newly compiled students' directory, it is seen that students from twenty-four States, five foreign countries and one United States possession are attending the University. There is a total of sixty-eight students from the different States, and twelve from foreign countries.

Of the States, Louisiana ranks first with 10 students; Oklahoma ranks second with 9 students, and New Mexico third with 8 students. The rest of the States represented, together with the number of students from each one, are as follows: Wisconsin, 3; Arkansas, 2; Massachusetts, 1; Illinois, 4; Florida, 2; Missouri, 4; Mississippi, 3; North Dakota, 1; Iowa, 2; Tennessee, 1; Kansas, 1; Minnesota, 1; California, 2; Alabama, 3; Nebraska, 1; Indiana, 3; Kentucky, 1; Ohio, 1; Washington, D. C., 1; New York, 4. A peculiar fact noticeable about the students from New York is that every one of them is from New York City.

Of the foreign countries, Mexico has more representatives than any other country, having a total of six students. Other countries are represented as follows: Brazil, 2; Panama, 1; Persia, 1; and Austria, 1. The United States possession of Hawaii is represented by one student.

CURTAIN CLUB TO HAVE NEWEST KIND OF SCENES

Novel Use of Draperies Instead of Painted Scenery to Be Feature of the Club's Next Production Dec. 2.

Those who were struck by the novel and effective use of curtains in Forbes Robertson's production of "Hamlet" will be interested to learn that this latest idea in stage setting is to be employed by a University organization shortly. The Curtain Club, which gives its performance on Dec. 2, has abandoned formal painted scenery and will feature only draperies. All the most artistic productions in the East are given in this manner nowadays. This simplicity of decoration serves as an aid to the imagination, and enhances the poetic effect.

A different setting is called for in each of the four short plays the club will present. "The Glittering Gate" takes place before the gate of Heaven, a golden gate set in a topless wall. The entire scene will be played in a half-light. The wall will be represented by massive black draperies, with the doors of gold in the center.

The scene of "The Workhouse Ward" is a simple room in an Irish poorhouse. The only furniture will be two cots and a chair or two. The idea of bareness and dreariness will be accentuated by the gray curtains which enclose the room.

The action of "The Dark Lady of the Sonnets" takes place at midnight, so black curtains will again be employed. The back of the stage will show a formal terrace with conventional golden trees. This will be the most elaborate set of all, in keeping with the Elizabethan atmosphere of Shaw's burlesque.

Cheerfulness and comfort will be the keynote of the staging of Barrie's "Rosalind." The scene is the living-room in a cottage at some English seashore town. Gray curtains, together with chintz hangings and brightly flowered furniture, will create this effect of cosiness.

The hangings will be so arranged as to be in place one behind the other when the initial curtain is rung up. Nothing will have to be done in the intermissions except place the appropriate furniture. This will enable the production to be given within about two hours.

"Doc" Henry Gets First Donation

As a result of the movement to take up a collection for "Doc" Henry on Thanksgiving, Mrs. James B. Clark of Austin, an honorary member of the Alumni Association, has led off the list of contributors with a check for the "faithful Doc." Mrs. Clark was the first employer of Henry when he first came to Texas. Her letter to Mr. Bellmont follows:

"Dear Mr. Bellmont:
"Having read in The Texan of Nov. 21 of the sudden illness of 'Doc' Henry, the faithful friend and servitor of the Longhorn football team of the University of Texas, I was more than pleased to read further of the generous design of the young men to raise a subscription for his benefit of several hundred dollars. After twenty years of service, in which the old knightly motto, 'Foy pour devoir,' has been illustrated in deeds of fidelity in this humble life, as in the conscious acts of heroes of an older time, it seems a just and graceful recognition of the fact that the flower of human love and sympathy may blossom in the humble cat as well as in the palace

Thanksgiving has always been associated with the idea of "home-coming," and this connotation of the term lends a delightful significance to the custom that the University seeks to encourage, that of urging the return of the old students at this time of the year, when they can join with the present student-body in the festivities that go to make Thanksgiving what it is.

It is a "home-coming," and a needed one. The alumni form a large and powerful factor in the life of any institution, if they will but recognize and make use of their power to further its development. No institution can afford to lose their active interest and support.

Here at Texas, a State University, the alumni include many of the most intelligent and influential men and women in the State. Many, as individuals, are constantly furthering the interests of their Alma Mater in one way or another. But their chief strength lies in work done by them as a body, that is, in organization.

What a wonderful opportunity would be theirs if the alumni of this University would organize and take an active and determined part, not only in the battle that every university has to fight against ignorance and prejudice and indifference, but also in the local activities of the student-body.

The University of Texas Law Association has established a commendable and advantageous custom—that of returning to the University at Thanksgiving time for their annual meetings. May students of other departments follow, and may the Thanksgivings of the future be the occasions for the return of hundreds and hundreds of ex-students. May the University of Texas' Thanksgiving home-comings become famous the country over. Texas will be greatly the gainer for many reasons. A valuable tradition will be established and will be of such moment as to attract Nation-wide attention. The State will benefit by the meeting annually of large numbers of the component parts—students and ex-students of the State's greatest institution of learning. The University will do the greatest good when the great body of its alumni are pulling shoulder to shoulder with the University itself. The University of Texas Bar Association is surely beginning a movement that will grow into unthought-of proportions.

CHAPEL NOTICES.

The man who has had experience is the man to speak with authority, and the rest of us should accept his statements and act accordingly. The talk at Chapel yesterday was a statement of experience by a man who has lived a life of sobriety, who has taken care of his dimes, who has left out the unessentials of life, who has saved his money by saving his time, who has not squandered his life and his substance in riotous living. Mr. Benshin, who made the remarks, is a plain business man without education or training except what he got himself, but he has left off the wrong things and has taken up the right. His income now is $20 a day. All of us would like to have his income, but are we willing to pay the price? He will speak again this morning.

Come Back!

We have tasted the bitterness of defeat,
We have seen our glory fade;
Shall we hang our heads like a cur that's beat,
Or cringe like men afraid?

No! From the crumbling dust of the prize we sought,
We shall rise with an appetite
For the sweets of a victory dearly bought,
And a strong man's love of the fight.

The spirit that ruled in days that are gone
Is hovering o'er us still;
And the heart of Texas beats to the song—

We can! We must! We will!

for this game, fellows, with the same spirit that won for Washington—courage, loyalty and indomitable spirit in the face of overwhelming odds. Let's show Notre Dame what kind of football Texas plays when 2500 fighters are back of the team. Let's feel our blood boil for Texas, and our hearts beat for Texas, and our lungs shout for Texas. Buck up, fellows; show the old Southern spirit of 1776—show these Yankees what the Southern spirit of 1915 can do. Back each player with your confidence, loyalty and powerful ability to fight. The Spirit's loose; can't you feel it? Hold that mule! It's rarin' to go!

Editor of The Texan:

A brief article in Sunday's Texan mentions me as one of the members of the Council of the Boy Scout movement in Austin, and states that "All these men are devoting much time to the development of the boys of Austin." I am not a member of the Council so far as I know, and have never devoted any time to this worthy movement, the usefulness of which I do not doubt. Very truly yours,

NEWS FROM AMERICAN COLLEGES

(By Carl G. Raht.)

De Pauw.

There is a complaint among the coaches of the larger universities that the smaller colleges are getting some of the best athletes. They think that if this continues there will be a time when there will be no "Big Taree" or "Four." On the other hand, they expect the schools like De Pauw soon to play the larger schools for the National championship.

Barnard.

There is a possibility that the honor system may be exchanged for the old system of having proctors present at the examinations. At a meeting of students held recently a change was made in the rules whereby a girl who sees another cheating must, instead of reporting her, speak to the offender and let her report her own case. This change may cause the honor system to be continued.

Harvard.

Miss Grace George of the Playhouse, New York City, offers $1000 to the undergraduate student of an American college who submits the best play to her before June 1, 1916. She wants to hear from college men all over the country, for the best plays of the future are coming from college men. She says she wants to do her part "toward encouraging young playwrights, at the time they need it most, when they are unknown."

Kansas.

The Daily Kansan suggests that they send out a scout to Arkansas to get one Turner to play football at K. U. It is reported that Turner is 6 feet 7 inches tall, weighs 238 pounds and is but 19 years old. It is prophesied that he will become a real man as he gets older.

Toronto (Canada).

They have rallies at Toronto also. And they are also for the purpose of encouraging the fighting spirit. Persons who attend these rallies, however, are expected to do some fighting themselves. They call them recruiting rallies, and they are designed to get men to enlist in the British army.

Exeter.

Nine Exeter men took part in the Yale-Princeton game, five playing for Yale and four for Princeton. All these men played exceptionally well for their respective colleges. Way, who plays a tackle, made Yale's touchdown on a recovered fumble after running 25 yards.

Maine.

Placing men in the third, seventh, eighth, ninth and thirty-second positions, the University of Maine won for the third consecutive time the New England A. A. cross-country championship, as a result of her victory in the fourth annual run held at Franklin Park, Boston, last Saturday. Dartmouth came a close second.

Syracuse.

The death of Booker T. Washington has brought to light a coincidence of especial interest to Syracusans. David C. Burroughs is the principal involved. It seems that this negro educator was born a slave on the plantation owned by Burroughs' great-grandfather, near Hale's Ford, Virginia. Burroughs' father was brought up on the same estate.

THE HONOR SYSTEM

By Dr. H. T. Parlin

The Honor System is generally thought to have originated at the University of Virginia, and it was from that institution that it was brought to the University of Texas by members of our first faculty. There is good reason to believe, however, that the Honor System was in operation in essential principle at South Carolina College many years before the University of Virginia was founded. In any case, this method of protecting the good name of a school and the integrity of its work is a distinctly Southern institution, and has never been fully understood by Northern colleges. It is a survival of old days in the South, when the men who went up to college were almost entirely the sons of the well-to-do, of the so-called gentility. The college body in those days was united by a strong class feeling, and conscious of what became known as the "gentlemanly" character of the student body. At this character, it is not that individuals should resent being watched during examinations, and that such a group would be willing to take measures to protect its ideal of honor from any discredit that might be reflected upon it by the moral lapses of any of its members. The conditions from which the Honor System sprang naturally, then, were chiefly two: a homogeneous student body with one code of behavior; and a sense of class responsibility, a trace of noblesse oblige that lent this code the authority of a class obligation.

Many criticisms have been made of the Honor System as it exists in the University of Texas. These have in their main points been adequately answered by President Mezes in a speech to the students in February 1914 (Alcalde, Vol. II, No. 5). But the real obstacles to a successful operation of the Honor System, as I see it, do not rest so much in details of procedure, as Dr. Mezes thought at the time of his speech, as in the character of our students and the conditions of their life and work here. Conditions at the University of Texas are very different from those in which the Honor System naturally arose. Our student body is heterogeneous in social character, with necessarily little concerted notion of its ideals as a social group. It is further divided by conflicting interests. The student body falls apart, not so much from its own weight as a mass, as from the variety of courses pursued by its members, a broad sweep including professional, vocational, and cultural subjects. It is almost committing a solecism to speak of organic unity in the face of so many conflicting aims.

Under these conditions it would seem necessary to think carefully over the future of the Honor System at the University of Texas. Not that we should be pessimistic, but that we should be thoughtful and constructive in our criticism. The Honor System rests upon an active moral sentiment in the community, and this is more difficult to awaken in a large body of students with different social and intellectual ideals than it was in the colleges of the Old South, where men were all pursuing the same course, and where class unity made the individual sensitive to any act that reflected upon the pretensions of the class. In the place of the class solidarity and a loyalty to class tradition of an older day, what can we of the University of Texas offer as a sufficient motive for maintaining the Honor System in the life of our institution? If such a motive is to be found anywhere, it must be found in school pride, in the public spirit which claims for the University the highest possible life. Our interest in a growing state institution like this of Texas is bound to become less and less a personal matter, and more and more a public duty. If we are prepared to take this view of the matter, I believe that the Honor System is safe for the future.

There are two dangers which need to be watched in connection with as difficult a matter as student self-discipline; and we can only steer clear of these dangers by sinking ourselves in what is for the good of the University as an institution. The first danger can only be met by us as individuals. It is easy to look with calmness and dispassion upon the punishment of breaches of honor when the offender is personally unknown to us. But let the blow fall home, and we may not be so self-controlled. A friend in moral defeat and under punishment arouses our keenest sympathy. At such a time we may do and say things that, while they spring from natural goodness of heart, may not be guided by the wisest loyalty. And again resentment, arising frequently from an insufficient knowledge of the facts involved, may flare up, and spreading create ill-feeling, discrediting the Honor System in the most insidious way. The history of the cases tried in the last ten years would justify our confidence in the essential justness of trials for breaches of the Honor System. The personal guarantee of any one of the three men who have sat for many years upon the Discipline Committee of the faculty should certainly satisfy us in this matter; and all three of these men have affixed their approval unreservedly to what has been done in the past. Having founded a student court for the trial of honor cases, and having every reason to believe it honest and efficient, we should support it fully and faithfully. It is only by putting our personal feelings aside, and by looking at the matter from the larger point of view, the integrity of the student court and the good name of the University, that we will be able individually to support the Honor system. Thoughtless and ill-seasoned criticism of the Honor System by a few well-known students can do more to undermine student self-discipline than all the rest of the University can do to build it up.

Admitting the necessity of individual support of the Honor System as a matter of decent school pride, and putting aside for the moment any differences we may have as to details of procedure in trials, let us face what is perhaps the more serious danger to the success of the Honor System here at Texas. Until four years ago the Honor System constituted the sole function of student self-government. Since that time a legislative branch has been formed called the Students' Assembly. The members of the Students' Council and the Students' Assembly are elected by Australian ballot, thus developing a considerable political activity. Some of us doubt the wisdom of extending student self-government beyond the Honor System. One very good reason for restricting student self-government is that the student has not time for many outside activities, especially when these activities involve functions of importance which are directly in line with the duties of the administrative officers of the University. But the chief reason for making the Honor System the sole function of student self-government is that it is dangerous to involve this specific thing in a contest into which extraneous motives are bound to enter. The office of Councilman should be taken out of politics as far as possible, and made an office of merit and public service. It is quite clear that the duties of the Students' Council are not so pleasant that any student would care to seek the office for itself. A student desires to become a Councilman for one of two reasons: either he feels it a public duty as a student of the University to do the unpleasant work of trying cases of breaches of the Honor System, in which case he is satisfied to present his name in nomination and stand his chances for election upon his merits; or he desires the office for other reasons than itself, in which case he is willing to head caucuses, form combines, in other words run a political race and play a political game. To sit in judgment upon the moral reputation of a fellow student involves too great a responsibility for any man to seek by any and every means the office of Councilman. The office is too important to the student body to award it as a political spoil. Let us give up the boyish notion of playing the political game. Social organizations should be satisfied that honorable office seeks their members as a matter of merit. And students with a social propaganda should not attempt to further it

JEWISH STUDENTS WORKING FOR BIGGER "TEXAS"

By Harold Potash.

With a total enrollment in 1913 of some thirty students in all departments of the University, the number of Jewish students has steadily advanced until in the last three years it has increased to some eighty members. This is a total increase of fifty students in the three years, and is a correspondingly greater increase than that shown in the entire University enrollment during that time. This steady advance is due to one fact, primarily,—the work of the Menorah Society.

Each summer, for the past three, this society has appointed committees to urge Jewish students from over the State to come to the University of Texas, in preference to attending the other schools. In short, the society has advertised the University. These committees write to the superintendents or principals of the High Schools throughout the State and in this way receive the names of the Jewish students graduating from high schools that year. Then letters are written to these individual students urging them to attend this school and showing them the benefits to be derived from attending the University. These letters are very often answered by the prospective student, and numerous questions are asked concerning the University conditions and surroundings. Also many letters are received from the parents of prospective students inquiring into conditions in and around the school. At the beginning of school these students who have kept in touch with the committee are met and aided in matriculating and getting situated.

Menorah Society.

The Menorah Society of the University was an outgrowth from a Literary Society that was founded in 1907. This was an organization of both a literary and social nature and did not take a very active part in University life and affairs. This organization kept up with a membership between fifteen and thirty until about 1913. In that year the society was changed into the Menorah Society and also joined the Inter-collegiate Menorah Society. This was an organization started by the Jewish students at Harvard, and the movement was quickly taken up by colleges and universities throughout the United States. At present the roster contains the names of thirty-five American universities, being made up of such schools as Brown, Columbia, College of the City of New York, Cornell, John Hopkins, Radcliffe, California, Illinois, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Yale and through control of the Students' Council. For it is certain that no social cause can be won through the administration of the Honor System. And yet the Honor System may be sacrificed if it is sold to the strongest or the most astute political body. The students of the University of Texas have operated the Honor System with success up to this time. Let us put it for the future on the high plane that it most solemnly demands. Let us not undermine it by unwisely assailing its decrees in private; and let us found it solidly in the University's confidence by making the office that administers it a public duty and moral responsibility, not a political ambition.

many others. The youngest institution added to this inter-collegiate list is Rice Institute of Houston.

The purpose of this organization is the study and advancement of Jewish culture and ideals, and the working out of all the problems that confront American Jewry of today. However, the membership is not limited to Jewish students, but includes non-Jews as well. Many of the chapters have non-Jewish members. In carrying out the purposes laid down in the constitution and as the fundamental basis upon which the organization rests, the Society here has literary meetings once every two weeks. At these meetings the Society is generally addressed by an outside speaker, and on some topic pertaining to Judaism. At some of the meetings, however, programs are rendered by members of the Society. In this work the Society is aided by Rabbi David Rosenbaum. The Menorah has absolutely no connection with social activities.

The Menorah Journal is the literary organ of the inter-collegiate Menorah Society. It contains contributions from leading men in letters and affairs in both the United States and abroad.
