

Sociologist Wins Best Book Award

Posted on December 8, 2009 by Jessica Sinn

Marc Musick, associate professor of sociology and College of Liberal Arts associate dean for student affairs, won the Best Book Award for “Volunteers: A Social Profile” (Indiana University Press, 2007) from the Association for Research on Nonprofit Organization and Voluntary Action.

Musick and John Wilson, co-author of the book and professor of sociology at Duke University, accepted the award on Nov. 19 at the organization’s national conference.

In “Volunteers: A Social Profile,” Musick and Wilson cover a broad range of topics, including volunteer motivation, historical trends and social influences, providing insight into the causes and consequences of volunteering.

This entry was posted in Awards, Faculty Books and tagged book award, College of Liberal Arts, Department of Sociology, Marc Musick, the Association for Research on Nonprofit Organization and Voluntary Action, Volunteers: A Social Profile by Jessica Sinn. Bookmark the permalink [<https://sites.utexas.edu/shelflife/2009/12/08/sociologist-wins-best-book-award/>].