AR 34 Supporting the creation of a comprehensive Semester in Washington DC Program

WHEREAS: The nation's capital has always been ripe with educational and job opportunities for students interested in politics.

WHEREAS: These prospects have been so highly valued and sought after that several universities, including Texas A&M, Michigan, and California have raced past UT and established sophisticated academic internship programs.

WHEREAS: The UT System and UT Administrators, concerned with the denial of this experience, teamed up to form a program comprehensive enough to support a full academic load coupled with an internship and research seminar, one that is accessible to all majors.

WHEREAS: Pending approval and implementation from the UT System, the University of Texas will have a formidable presence on Capitol Hill.

BE IT RESOLVED: The Student Government of the University of Texas at Austin supports the creation and implementation of the "Horns on the Hill: A Semester in DC" Program, contingent upon the development of an appropriate funding mechanism.
