Alice E. Kober (1906 – 1950) was a Classical scholar and academician whose fastidiously detailed and documented life's work contributed to the decipherment of Linear B. Miss Kober contended that if a language has inflection, certain signs are bound to appear over and over again in certain positions of the written words, as prefixes, suffixes, or infixes. Until just days before her death from cancer at the age of 43, she employed a unique heuristic approach that proved conclusively the Mycenaean script (circa 1500 – 1100 BC) is inflected. Her findings and methods were subsumed by Michael Ventris (1922 – 1956) who in 1952 successfully deciphered Linear B as a syllabic language of archaic Greek etymology.

Miss Kober was born, educated, employed, and died in New York City. She attended Hunter College High School, transitioned into Hunter College and graduated with an A.B. degree in 1928. She received an M.A. and Ph.D in Philosophy from Columbia University. As a professor of Classics at Brooklyn College, she cites her prodigious work load of teaching five classes as the cause for feeling “so worn out that for the first time in my life I am worrying about my health” (Kober, Letters, 2 May 49).

As a scholar of Aegean languages Miss Kober began work with Linear B in 1931. In an effort to procure access to materials unavailable to the public, she engaged in a working relationship with Sir John Myres (1869-1954) of Oxford University in late 1946. Sir John was the legal guardian of the collection of Sir Arthur Evans (1851-1941) who unearthed Linear B tablets at Knossos in 1900. In anticipation of a visit to Oxford, Miss Kober ran time trials to estimate her ability to record the maximum amount of Knossos materials during her 5 week tenure, although she would have to factor in a reduction of that rate when her fingers were “stiff from cold” in post-War rationed England (Kober, Correspondence, 8 Feb 1947). She produced copious files with entries written on 2x3 and 4x6 inch recycled pieces of paper (over 186,000) cut from greeting cards, lecture announcements, envelopes, etc. in an attempt to both limit the bulk of her materials and to circumvent severe paper shortages.

Alice E. Kober's collaboration with Sir John produced her system of numeration and classification of Linear B tablets that provides a common vocabulary and order for all scholars. Her undervalued input in the publication of Scripta Minoa, Vol. II (Oxford University Press, 1952), the definitive publication of materials from Knossos, was extensively and exhaustively carried on through a steady correspondence between Brooklyn and Oxford. Miss Kober published seminal articles in the American Journal of Archaeology and lectured to linguistic and Classics societies. Even as her health declined, she worked diligently to establish the Center for Minoan Linguistic Research at the University of Pennsylvania.

Miss Kober, described by a former teacher as “outstanding not only for her clarity of mind but also for her fearlessness and honesty” (Myres, Correspondence, 15 Jan. 1951) was suspicious of her contemporaries' opinions about Linear B stating definitively that “I am only interested in what the Minoans wrote” (Kober, Correspondence, 22 Nov. 1948). With doggedness and éclat, Kober produced meticulous research materials that are stunning as both empirical tools and works of art.

Scope and Content of the Records

Research material, publications, manuscripts, lectures, correspondence and professional material are included in the approximately 188,825 items that comprise the Alice E. Kober Papers (1932-1950) of the Program in Aegean Scripts and Prehistory. The bulk of the items support the decipherment of Linear B while correspondence, lectures, and professional material add context to the research material.

The first group, Research Material (approx. 187,032 items), is comprised of five sub-groups. The first and second sub-groups are scholarly notes regarding Linear B and to a far lesser extent other Aegean scripts. The Research Notes (approx. 186,747 items) and the Linear B Research Notebooks (40 items) show 65 syllables and a smaller number of words arranged in a variety of ways to discern patterns of use and frequency. The majority of the materials relate to tablets discovered at Knossos. The Research Notes sub-group consists of paper slips cut to 2x3" (approx. 116,672) and arranged in card board cigarette box files or cut to 4x6" (approx. 63,360) and kept in a vertical file cabinet. There are an approximate 6,791 loose notes cards. These notes are the raw material with which Alice E. Kober discovered inflection in Linear B, formed the basis of her scholarly writings, and collaborated with Sir John L. Myres. They were also used in an attempt to understand the origin of Linear B by comparing it to other known languages of the general area.

The third sub-group, Tabulations (114 items), contains graphs and other statistical representations of patterns of word and sign use in Linear B (from both Knossos and Pylos) as evidenced in Kober's voluminous research notes.

The fourth sub-group, Tablet Transcriptions, contains copies of Linear B inscriptions from tablets found on mainland Greece at Pylos (29 items). The material, made public in Emmett Bennett Jr.'s dissertation, was used by Kober to confirm theories predicated on the Knossos materials.

The fifth and final subgroup consists of research material by Michael Ventris (3 items), utilized by Kober in the course of her own research, and notes on Hittite vocabulary, by an unknown author.

The second group of material consists of the publications of Alice E. Kober (28 items). Included are her Columbia University Ph.D. dissertation, three articles published in the American Journal of Archaeology, and other assorted article offprints and reviews.

The third group contains several article and review manuscripts (70 items), including "Tentative Arrangement of Linear B Inscriptions from Knossos," which was published in Scripta Minoa, The Written Documents of Minoan Crete with Specific Reference to the Archives of Knossos, Vol. II, and other notable drafts, such as that of "A Note on Some 'Cattle' Tablets from Knossos."

The fourth group consists of lectures and associated research materials (1,014 items). Kober prepared lectures for her students at Brooklyn College and also made formal presentations to scholarly societies, such as the Yale Linguistics Club and the Archaeological Institute of America. The sub-group Ancient Peoples (1,000 items) includes extensive notes and citations about the language and culture of over 15 pre-Hellenic civilizations.

The fifth group is comprised of material documenting Kober's professional activities and affiliations (125 items), including a Curriculum Vitae and resume (6 items), forms and records from Brooklyn College (12 items), and extensive material relating to her receipt of the Guggenheim Memorial Foundation Fellowship (103 items). Also included are two manuscripts of Scripta Minoa III, with extensive notations and edits by Kober, made in preparation for the volume's publication.

The sixth group, Biographical Material (26 items), includes short biographies authored by Emmett L. Bennett, Jr., obituaries, a copy of her death certificate, and genealogical material of the Kober family.

The seventh group is comprised of letters written to and from Alice E. Kober, Sir John L. Myres, Michael Ventris, and other individuals, institutions and publications (522 items). The bulk of the items are a steady stream of letters sent by Kober to Sir John (66 items) in furtherance of the publication of Scripta Minoa, Volumes II and III, and correspondence with John Franklin Daniel (123 items), a close friend and colleague of Kober's, and J. W. Sundwall (64 items).

The eighth and final group (6 items) consists of papers and articles written about Kober, including one written in memory of her by one of her students at Brooklyn College, Eva Brann. Also included are pieces written by Prof. Thomas Palaima, director of the PASP Archives, and Susan Trombley, the archivist who worked on the materials in the 2002/2003 academic year.

Provenance

The bulk of the materials were donated by Emmett L. Bennett, Jr. to PASP under the custody of Dr. Thomas G. Palaima. Mr. Bennett received the materials from the University of Pennsylvania.

Photocopies of correspondence between Alice E. Kober and Sir John L. Myres are taken from Sir John's materials housed at the Ashmolean Museum, Oxford.
