Following presentation of their credentials, the President invited the two Ambassadors into his office. He exchanged a few remarks with the new Ambassador of Togoland and then turned to Ambassador Bogdan. The President said, with reference to his recent talk with President Maurer, that he did not remember when he had enjoyed a visit so much. He had an extremely favorable impression of President Maurer as a man of peace who was working, not only for the best interest of his own country, but for the good of all. He thought President Maurer set an excellent example for everyone to follow and he had been very pleased to talk with him.

The President felt that he and President Maurer had understood each other very well and he hoped that positive results would flow from their meeting. He was confident that the Ambassador would work in this direction, and he wished him all success in his mission in this country.

Ambassador Bogdan expressed great appreciation for the President's remarks. He said that he had spoken briefly with
