in interpreting my suggestion. You sound like making up nice uniform fonts of Linear B Characters. No, I want to suggest that the WINGSPREAD CONVENTIONS be up dated and newly viable conventional transcriptions for some rare signs be established, and bad ones revised. By committee. But now to brass tax. BI

Subject: let's get this over with Well, sure he had some sons or grandsons, or cousins. And, since he knew very well about having pairs of animals, there's a fair chance that he knew about women, even though he wouldn't mention them. Anyhow, once the a-re-ka landed on a-rah-rah-rot, there was lots of population, loads of women writing things secretly, and hordes of men going off hunting, etc. Which brings us down to Moses. Now he was not quite right. As his name suggests (consider it in the Greek world where they pronounced it Mopsus - and I'm not sure I'm making this up) was appropriate, he was sort of MOPEY, wouldn't go out hunting and fishing, nor would I, and hung around the yard, sneaking looks at what the girls were doing and learning. Now the fellow upstairs noticed this, and was pleased as punch because at last he had somebody he could show off HIS handwriting to. His previous attempts at getting rid of bad population (like dinosaurs, and people with golden lower limbs) with small moons landing in the gulf of mehico and floods way up in the mountains of Ararat, hadn't been very efficient, he decided to try persuasion and got Moses to do his dirty work and spread his laws around. Of course, that didn't work either, but now it became OK for men to know how to read, and eventually to right. And, natch, the rules were changed. Only men were permitted to do that, and women were sent back to do their knitting. &c. So, you see, I got it all wrong in the beginning. Of coarse Adam coulddn't write. But, Oh, that Eve! But of course all the gossip she kept in her diary, hiding it in the dairy, got all messed up in the flood. Just as well, her handwriting was abednego to read. (She wrote with a reed, as a matter of fact) You'll have to wait for Vergil's Georgics for any men to do things with reeds. I think it will be best if I sign this in good computer ease - Hay nonny-nonny Mouse
