Dear Wissler:

I understand you were one-fourth of the total audience at the annual SEPM meeting and hope you enjoyed it. Our regents are much opposed to trips outside of Texas and it is not possible to get expenses for such trips, otherwise I would have been eager to go. Perhaps we will have a larger meeting in 1946.

There is a rumor that the curatorship of invertebrate paleontology at the American Museum is open. That is the position which Harold Vokes held. It is supposed to be possible to combine this curatorship with part-time teaching at Columbia University. The position is apparently quite attractive, and naturally I am much interested. However, I am not certain that I have it straight. Could you with your good connections at the Museum find out what the status is and put in a plug for me? I would appreciate it greatly.

When are you coming through Texas again? If you do please don't fail to stop over in Austin. We always have a couple of red meat points left over for our friends.

Best regards.

Sincerely yours

H. B. Stenzel
