Dear Tom,

Along with your Agamemnon postcard - came the carbon of a letter from Fordham, which I trust you will have received by now, so that you will understand and accept my congratulations, too. I, too, see no reason for any hitch in the formalities.

So all that is necessary is that the composition of the dissertation proceed with deliberate haste, so that you can begin to catch up against all that money you spent in the air between Athens and the States. I seem to remember that there were some questions I was supposed to answer, sitting on the Van Hise desk, but I don't think, I hope, that they weren't the sort to hold you up. I will try to do them this week, which is confusing, but not so bad as next week.

Spring is ready to begin - a small thunderstorm zipping overhead right now, the ~~ice~~ ice obviously soon to break up, the bicycle up, but not ~~yet~~ yet going any great distance, the natives very restless, the solid lessons of Wheelock's Latin just finishing this week, to yield to small readings, and the whole probably to be replaced by a new and different book next year, which looks ~~to~~ good but harder to figure out how to teach it.

7 April 1950

Yours
Lunt
