

THE LIBERATOR MAGAZINE

September 26, 2019

The Liberator Magazine

Creative Writing & Poetry, General Content, Hector Osegueda

Emma Robinson, Hector Osegueda

No comments

Reflecting in the Tetons

Written by Hector Osegueda.

Graphic by Emma Robinson.

–

And there we were

The air, how brisk and free as it flurried past

up up

up up

As we trekked I couldn't help but look up up and admire the behemoth

We ascended, in awe

And up there, I thought of before

And how constrained

How limited I felt

But now

Now the

Sheer

Drop

Back

Down

Gives us perspective

And calls us to action

The descent was meditative as our alpine surroundings gave us assurance

A vestigial tranquility that certainly none of us have felt since then

A sense of security that once was familiar but now is lost

When we reached our fire late in the night, we knew all was well

For we had been sculpted

Changed by

A curative experience

One that could be accomplished only in the Rockies

Our affliction was the cause of various mazes

The creation of life and subsequent emotions

However, behold the grander

For as Stanley once said the things the summer visitor never forgets and having enjoyed once desires to enjoy again

Posted by:
The Liberator Magazine

Previous Post

Next Post

Leave a Reply

Enter your comment here...

The Liberator Magazine is the official publication of the College of Liberal Arts at the University of Texas at Austin . Don't forget to follow us on:

Website Powered by WordPress.com.